Democrats Vow to Free Party From 'Bureaucrats'

Rayburn Leader In Declaration; 78th Congress Opens Today

By Robert De Vore
Post Staff Writer

In a Democratic caucus without precedent in the last decade, majority members of the House yesterday received from their leader, Speaker Sam Rayburn, a new declaration of independence from the dictates of Government bureau chiefs.

The Speaker's speech to the majority, made behind closed doors but so startling that its implications quickly carried beyond the House Chamber, by all odds was the highlight of preliminaries to the opening today of the portentous Seventy-eighth Congress.

It crystalized, as has no previous utterance, private or public, the determination of Democrats no longer to accept, without having their say about them, legislative proposals predigested in Government offices downtown.

The speaker exempted from his vigorous attack on "bureaucrats," the person of President Roosevelt who tomorrow will lay his own war program before the Congress that in the next two years must share with him awesome responsibilities for decisions that may help lift the Nation to victory and peace.

Bureaucrats Assailed

Demonstrating the tightness of the Democratic majority in the House, it appeared for a time yesterday as though the party would be unable to summon as many members to its caucus as the Republicans were likely to in their "conference," held afterward, also in the House chamber.

The Democrats called the roll four times, but at no time did more than 204 party men answer, including the veteran Representative Crosser, of Ohio, who, pale and thin from a serious illness, arrived in a wheelchair.

The Republicans counted 204 on their first roll call.

Rayburn, who will be 61 years old today, mentioned "bureaucrats" in uncomplimentary terms on several occasions. On each occasion he was given what amounted to an ovation.

He promised the members of his party that in this Congress the majority won't accept legislation written by men in the Government bureaus who not only never were elected to office, but who never stood for election.

Not True of Subordinates

No more legislation, he promised, will be laid on the Speaker's desk that has not been considered by majority leaders in consultation with chairmen of proper committees. There will be consultation with the rank-and-file of majority members before major legislative decisions are made, he pledged.

Obviously aroused, the Speaker observed that the President always

Budget Message Is Postponed Until Monday

Presidential Secretary Stephen Early said yesterday that presentation of the Government's budget to Congress, originally scheduled for Friday, had been postponed until Monday.

Early made the definite announcement after President Roosevelt told a press conference that mechanical problems had arisen in printing statistical tables, threatening delay.

The Chief Executive said he was working now on his annual message on the state of the Union, which he is to deliver in person tomorrow.

Working with him on it, he disclosed, has been Robert Sherwood, the playwright, who now is an official of the Office of War Information.

Tuskegee, Ala., Jan. 5.—Dr. George Washington Carver, the noted Negro scientist, died at 7:30 p. m. today at his home at Tuskegee Institute.

Dr. Carver had been in failing health for some months and was confined to his bed for the past 10 days.

Born of slave parents at Diamond Grove, Mo., he was never sure of his birth date, but once estimated that it was "about 1864."

He became a member of the Tuckegee Institute faculty in 1894 and has been attached to the Negro institution ever since.

Hospitals Here Get Priorities For Expansion

Georgetown U. Institution to Get 28 Additional Beds

Georgetown University Hospital is assured of 28 additional beds and Children's Hospital of additional admission and waiting room space following action by the War Production Board yesterday to grant priorities.

Nurse Training Planned

After a meeting of Federal and District officials called by Maury Maverick, director of the governmental division of WPB, Maverick revealed that priorities for the reconstruction of the old Therkeld School in Georgetown into nurses' classrooms and recreation quarters to release space within the hospital itself had been placed in the hands of Federal Works Agency officials.

The governmental division also has given approval to FWA project DC-49-123, which involves a $40,000 grant to remodel the dispensary at Children's Hospital to provide waiting room and admission room space. Actual priorities still remain to be processed, but WPB officials were confident they would be forthcoming within a few days.

Attention was focused upon the need for additional obstetrical beds at yesterday's hospital meeting, WPB spokesmen said.

Other Priorities Delayed

Meanwhile, Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer, revealed to The Post last night that the Health Department is seriously considering the training of a number of obstetrical nurses, often called midwives, to help relieve the pressure on doctors and hospitals here.

Dr. Ruhland pointed out that many babies could be delivered at home with perfect safety, but that shortage of doctors made it difficult

30% of Butter Set Aside For War Use

Order Takes Effect Feb. 1; Directive Putting Citrus Juices In Reserve Extended

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

American civilians will be expected to get by in 1943 using three pounds less butter per person and securing citrus juices directly from the fruits themselves, rather than from cans, as a result of two orders issued by Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard yesterday.

Wickard ordered 30 per cent of all 1943 creamery butter reserved for use of the armed forces and shipment to Russia, reducing the amount available for civilians to an estimated 13 pounds a person compared with the 16 pounds a person a year available in 1941 and 1942. The order will take effect February 1.

A War Production Board order reserving all canned citrus juices except unconcentrated grapefruit juices for military use was extended by Wickard. He also ordered all canners not to sell unconcentrated grape juice between January 6 and March 31.

Current Stocks to Be Sold

Neither order restricts the food retailer, who is free to sell all stocks he has on hand, the Agriculture Department said.

The citrus order is "to insure adequate supply of canned citrus products for Government purposes and to conserve tin plate by requiring civilians to utilize most of the citrus fruits in fresh rather than canned form," Wickard said.

After March 31, some supplies of concentrated canned grapefruit probably will be released by canners for civilian consumption, an Agriculture official said. Canners' supplies are being ordered withheld at this time because the supply of fresh grapefruit is currently plentiful, Agriculture said. Ultimately, half of the unconcentrated grapefruit juice pack, but no other citrus fruit juices will be made available for civilians, it was said.

More Held in Spring

Among the juices withheld for the military are concentrated orange, lemon and grapefruit and normal strength orange, lemon and combined juices.

The reserved butter will be used to supply both our armed forces and Russian requirements, with more than two-thirds of the reserved stock going to the armed forces and somewhat less than one-third to Russia. Toward spring, as dairy producton mounts from seasonal causes, the Department of Agriculture may be expected to withhold additional amounts to pile up quantities of butter for release to the civilian population during the slack winter months.

Wickard said the butter order will make it possible to continue today's generous supplies to the armed forces. Servicemen now receive twice the amount of dairy products received by civilians,

Mercury Drop To About 20 Forecast Here

The Weather Bureau predicted last night that Washington and vicinity would experience a temperature of about 20 degrees some time between 4 a. m. and 8 a. m. this morning, while it forecast a rise later in the day and moderate winds.

Yesterday the lowest was registered at 26 for 8:10 a. m., and the highest at 34 for 4 p. m. After 5 p. m. the temperature dropped slowly but steadily with the wind. Wind velocity was tallied at an average top of 22 miles an hour.

The same time last year, it was reported, the high was 36 and the low 19.

Oil Industry May Propose Elimination of A-Gas Books

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 5.—Elimination of "A" gasoline coupons and reduction of "B" and "C" coupon values probably will be recommended for the Eastern area this week by the Oil Industry Committee, it was learned today.

This move was disclosed as representatives of gasoline dealers in this section sought an OPA order to permit increased gasoline prices to enable dealers to "survive."

It was pointed out that the Oil Industry Committee's proposal, which will be made to the Petroleum Administration for War, would make available for moving fuel oil into the Eastern States the tank car space now used to transport gasoline.

A petroleum source said that the present haulage of tank cars, chief means of bringing petroleum products into the 17 Eastern States and the District of Columbia, consisted of 43 per cent gasoline, 25 per cent kerosene and heating oil and 32 per cent industrial residual, or heavy heating oil.

One oil industry leader said that the industry had asked elimination of "A" coupons and drastic cuts in the value of "B" and "C" coupons as far back as October.

Government officials know this is the solution, he said, "but it is a political play. They don't want to interfere with people's pleasure driving too much."

"As a result," he added, "a lot of people are going to be cold this winter just so others can drive their cars for pleasure. The Gov-

Raiders Leave 50,000 Tons Of Nip Shipping Ablaze, Sinking

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters in Australia (Wednesday), Jan. 6.—At least nine and probably 10 Jap ships have been destroyed by aerial bombing at Rabaul, New Britain, Gen. Douglas MacArthur announced today.

Thousand-pound bombs scored hits which left an estimated 50,000 tons of Jap shipping ablaze and sinking.

(News of finding such a heavy concentration of ships at Rabaul tied in with warnings published in Melbourne that the Japs were concentrating one of their largest armadas of transports and supply vessels as well as warships in the southwest Pacific for some large enterprise.)

On the ground in New Guinea, Allied forces were reported "closing in on the enemy" in the Sananda area, the last strong point of resistance for the Japs on the Papua peninsula. Allied bombers and attack planes bombed and strafed enemy installations there.

The communique said that in the Rabaul raid a direct hit with 1000-pound bombs was scored on a destroyer tender with a destroyer tied alongside. Eight other ships were hit with 1000-pound bombs and were left either enveloped in flames or sinking.

"The enemy's fighters attempted interception and six were shot down in air combat. One of our bombers is missing."

Japanese Grouping Armada in South Seas

By the Associated Press

Melbourne, Australia, Jan. 5.—The largest armada of transports, supply vessels and warships yet sent by Japan into the southwest Pacific is being assembled at various points under cover of adverse weather, a high government official said in a statement widely displayed in the Australian press today.

The official, who would not permit use of his name, said the threatening concentration meant one of three things:

1. The Japanese are about to try again to retake Henderson Airfield on Guadalcanal in the Solomons, now held by United States forces;

2. They are bent upon a determined effort to reinforce their units desperately isolated at Sananda Point in New Guinea where Gen. Douglas MacArthur's Australians and Americans are preparing a final general attack; or

3. The Japanese are making a major effort to strengthen their general defensive position in the southwest Pacific.

Scouting Australian Coast

He said Japanese aircraft apparently operating from submarines had been engaged in extensive reconnaissance of Australia's northeast coast, and he added that at Munda, on the northwest coast of New Georgia Island, 200 miles northwest of Guadalcanal, the enemy was building one of the greatest airfields in the area.

(In Washington, Navy Secretary Frank Knox said at a press conference that he had no information concerning an unusual Japanese naval concentration at Rabaul,

Take Offensive After New Enemy Supply Move Is Beaten Back

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

American troops have taken the offensive on Guadalcanal, following the failure of a new enemy attempt to supply their weakened forces there, and have captured important heights overlooking Henderson Field, the Navy reported yesterday.

High-ground positions near Mount Austen, a 1514-foot peak 4 miles southwest from our airfield, were wrested from the Japs January 4, and a field piece was captured, a communique announced. Six times the Nips counterattacked but were driven off with a loss of 150 killed.

Hills Serve Japs

Jungle-covered hills in this area have served as artillery positions from which the enemy pounded Henderson Field, and the new American attack may be a move to drive the Japs beyond artillery range of the United States airfield.

It is not believed here that the United States forces on Guadalcanal plan any general offensive against the 20,000 or more Japanese on the island. The latter are pocketed in mountainous and jungle strong points, which would be costly to reduce, and it seems

Adm. Nimitz Pins Medal On His Son

Pearl Harbor, Jan. 5.—In an unprecedented ceremony today, Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, Pacific Fleet commander, pinned the Silver Star Medal on the breast of his son, Lieut. Chester W. Nimitz, jr., a submarine's executive officer, for his successful accomplishment of a dangerous mission in enemy-controlled waters.

The admiral also awarded the Navy Cross to Capt. Ernest G. Small for his valiant command of the cruiser Salt Lake City during the Battle of Savo Island on the night of October 11-12.

As Admiral Nimitz read the citation for his son, he gave no sign of their relationship, proceeding the same as he had in hundreds of other Pearl Harbor decoration

Louse Chooses Sides in Desert

Cairo, Jan. 5.—The Germans in the desert are getting lousier. That is not a subjective opinion, but a statistical fact reported by the British medical services.

When the Afrika Korps arrived in Libya nearly two years ago, only 15 to 20 per cent of the prisoners taken had lice. The percentage among prisoners captured recently is between 80 and 100. That makes the Germans just as lousy as the Italians, according to British doctors who inspect them.

New Yank Force Activated as Allies Plan Tunisia Drive

By J. Wes Gallagher
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters, North Africa, Jan. 5.—Indicating progress in the organization of the huge Allied force that is being geared for the attack on Tunis and Bizerte, Allied headquarters announced tonight that the United States Fifth Army had been activated and Lieut. Gen. Mark W. Clark placed in command of the new force.

General Clark is the 46-year-old hero of the secret agent thriller who visited North Africa by submarine three weeks before the Allied landings and held a secret rendezvous with French officers.

His post of deputy commander in chief to Lieut. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower now is vacant, the announcement said.

16,000,000 Tons '43 Goal

Kaiser Yards Lead Parade As Ship Output Hits 4 a Day

American merchant shipyards now are producing four ships a day for an annual production rate of 14,400,000 tons, President Roosevelt said yesterday after announcing that his goal of eight million tons in 1942 had been exceeded by 90,800 tons.

Production during 1943 will be in excess of 16 million tons, the President said. By May, a peak of five a day will be reached, he said.

Earlier, Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the United States Maritime Commission, had reported that American yards are capable of producing 20 million tons of merchant shipping in 1943.

Rear Admiral Howard L. Vickery, deputy chairman of the commission, said that he expected to have enough steel in 1943 for a possible production peak of 18 million deadweight tons of merchant shipping.

In December, a record total of 121 ships weighing 1,199,300 tons were placed into service, Land said. He recalled that during all of 1941, only 95 ships of 1,068,000 were completed.

The production figures for 1942 were in addition to war vessels and 800 smaller ships.

The President made it clear that he was pleased with the way ship construction is comparing with ship sinkings, authorizing reporters to say that the child is doing well, but declining to provide specific figures.

Russians Retake 6 Strategic Rail Positions, Slay 11,000 Germans

By Natalia Rene
International News Service Staff Writer

Moscow, Jan. 6 (Wednesday).—Soviet recapture of six key junctions in the north central Caucasus and the lower Don region—including Nalchik, Prokhladnaya and Tsimlyansk—was announced today as a major disaster appeared to be closing in swiftly on Nazi armies retreating along the entire southern front.

Shattering Adolf Hitler's publicized dream of holding his lines in the Caucasus through the winter pending a new attempt to conquer the oil-rich isthmus next spring, Russian troops were disclosed to have engulfed the pivotal nucleus of the whole north Caucasian railway network.

Nalchik Reoccupied

The vital hub of Prokhladnaya, commanding all railways linking Rostov and the northwest Caucasus with the Grozny oil fields and the Caspian sea where Baku's richer fields lie, fell to Red Army columns Tuesday after the Russians with a sudden, overpowering blow reoccupied the railhead of Nalchik Monday.

Between these two towns the Russians overran the junctions of Kotlerevskaya and Maiskoe to complete their reconquest of the tranic web, it was announced in a special and the regular Soviet midnight communique.

Above the Caucasian border, meanwhile, the Soviet Juggernaut beating down the middle Don and across the spaces below Stalingrad recaptured the vital river port of Tsimlyansk, midway between the Volga Metropolis and Rostov, as well as the railway town of Morozovskaya, 43 miles to the north.

Tanks, Guns Taken

More than 11,000 Germans were declared to have been slain and hundreds of tanks, guns and other war implements seized or destroyed by the Soviets in the dozen days between December 24 and January 4. "Hundreds" of Nazis perished in the capture of Nalchik alone. There Russian tanks and artillery smashed a formidable enemy defense circle to sweep into that town and demolish a German salient which at one time almost reached the main Caucasian mountain pass leading to Tiflis and Baku.

Russian recovery of Tsimlyansk deprived the Germans of the principal highway span over the lower Don where last August the Nazis first fought their way across that river and launched the southern

Prisoners Prove Africa Drawing Nazis From East

By H. R. Knickerbocker
Chief of the Chicago Sun Foreign Service

With the French Forces in Tunisia, Jan. 2 (Delayed).—The Allied occupation and delivery of North Africa has drawn German forces from Russia.

Today I found a group of German prisoners, freshly captured, in the mountains north of here. Every one had been sent from Russia to Tunis since November 9. There is no way of telling how many such German soldiers have been sent or are being sent, but the fact that any have been moved is considered satisfactory and significant evidence of Adolf Hitler's growing weakness in manpower.

Combined with the reports of great Russian advances, this encourages observers here to believe Hitler has made up his mind to withdraw from large sectors in eastern Europe to defend himself against the growing Allied threat in the West.

better tactics to starve them out.

For nearly eight weeks now, virtually no supplies are believed to have reached the enemy forces through the American blockade. Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox disclsoed yesterday that the latest attempt to land provisions was a failure.

The eight destroyers which entered Guadalcanal waters January 2, he revealed, did not attempt to unload the badly needed food and munitions they were bringing. Instead they hurriedly dumped big iron drums containing supplies into the water off shore and headed homeward.

The enemy hoped they would float ashore and perhaps a few of them did, Knox said.

"The next morning," the Secretary added, "our PT boats and air people went out and sank all of the containers that were afloat. If the Japs got any at all, it was a very small, insignificant amount."

Munda Base Hit

Yesterday's Navy communique also reported additional American air raids on the Jap base at Munda and further patrol action on Guadalcanal January 4 (Solomons' time).

The communique spoke of "runways" being bombed in the attack, indicating that the Japs have been able to put in more than a single fighter strip there.

Secretary Knox confirmed prior indications that the force of eight destroyers which approached Guadalcanal January 2 and dropped supplies in the water was the same unit attacked the same day by American planes in middle Solomons.

Jap Fleet at Rabaul

He was asked about published reports that the Japs were concentrating a large fleet at Rabaul, New Britain, apparently in preparation for an attack on the Solomons or New Guinea.

He replied that there are always Jap ships at this main enemy base in the Southwest Pacific and that American planes keep it under constant observation, but that to his knowledge "there is no unusual concentration at the moment."

The Navy chief was asked for comment on the department's announcement Sunday that a new American battleship had shot down 32 Jap planes during a heavy air attack off Santa Cruz Island in the South Pacific last October.

Same Old Story

He replied that it was the same old story of an offensive weapon being developed and ultimately a defensive weapon was found to meet it.

A reporter asked if he meant there "wouldn't be another Prince of Wales or Repulse"—British capital ships sunk by Jap planes early in the war.

"I'm predicting nothing," he replied, "but I know we'll give them a hell of a fight."

The text of the Navy's communique, No. 240, follows:

"1. On January 4:

"'Catalinas' (Consolidated PBY) and 'Flying Fortresses' (Boeing B-1) executed a series of air attacks on the Munda area, in the New Georgia group. The same evening dive bombers, escorted by fighters, bombed antiaircraft positions, taxiways and runways in the same area. Results of the raids were not reported. All of our planes returned.

"2. Our troops on Guadalcanal attacked and gained high ground positions in the vicinity of Mount Austen, capturing an enemy fieldpiece. Six enemy counterattacks were repulsed with 150 Japanese killed. Patrols in other sectors killed 20 additional Japanese and captured howitzer mortars and light machine guns."

Bait Held Out to Poles

Bern, Switzerland, Jan. 5 (AP).—In a new effort to obtain the cooperation of Poles, the Germans were reported today to have instituted a system of a German food ration and wage scale for those Poles accepted in a new "organization of active collaborators."

The newspaper said the members had "the opportunity to lead materially advantageous lives if they showed the proper inner attitude to make an outward contribution" to German Europe.

ADVANCE—Red Army forces last night captured Nalchik (1) and Prokhladneski in their Caucasus drive. In the Don River sector to the north, the Russians reported the capture of Tsimlyansk (2) and Morozovskaya (3), important railway town prong of the pincers that laid fruitless siege to Stalingrad.

It also closed a trap around large Nazi forces caught in the southeastern corner of the Don bend and threatened to cave in the "roof" on top of many more thousands of invaders now trying to escape north from the Caucasian "prison."

Nalchik, Prokhladnaya, Kotlerevskaya, Maiskoe, Tsimlyansk and Morozovskaya were but the chief strongholds of dozens of additional populated points overrun by four convergent Soviet offensives that rolled ahead with increased speed toward Rostov after swamping desperate Nazi counterattacks.

Declaring that many more inhabited localities were scooped up in the North Caucasus Tuesday, the Soviet midnight communique told of "stiff fighting at the approaches to Nalchik" before that town was taken, adding:

"The German forces had surrounded the town with rows of powerful fortifications and had sown minefields on its approaches. Supported by artillery and tanks, our men overcame all the enemy's obstacles and his resistance, broke into the town and after a stubborn battle took possession of it.

"Hundreds of the corpses of the enemy dead were left on the approaches and the streets of the town."

The next day, it was added, Soviet troops smashed into "the city of Prokhladnaya (30 miles northeast of Nalchik) and after a desperate battle cleared it of the enemy."

1000 Rifles Taken

An incomplete count of the booty taken at Prokhladnaya, it was announced, showed 25 tanks and armored cars, 27 field guns, 1000 rifles, 63 trucks, 6 supply stores and much other material still being inventoried.

The sweeping Soviet advances in the south momentarily overshadowed the Red army's drive on the North Central Front beyond recaptured Velikie Luki to cut the Leningrad-Vitebsk Railway, reach the Latvian frontier and separate the German armies of the Leningrad region from those of the center.

But heavy fighting nevertheless raged on the Central Front through Thursday, according to the midnight communique, which said a large tank-supported Nazi infantry force attempted a counterattack southwest of Velikie Luki in an effort to stem a Soviet thrust toward the vital junction of Nevel.

"All the enemy's counterattacks were repulsed with great losses," the bulletin stated, adding that in some sectors the Soviets consolidated newly won positions beyond Velikie Luki.

Southwest and south of Stalingrad, the Russians said they had routed a German infantry battalion in one sector and repulsed a desperate counterattack in another.

Fierce Battle Breaks Out

A "fierce battle" was declared to have broken out when the Germans threw "large forces" into an "attempt to keep their positions at all costs," the communique recounted.

Violent Russian artillery fire broke up the enemy's dispositions, after which, it was stated, Soviet tanks and infantry burst into the Nazi lines and "compelled the enemy to retreat from a favorable position."

In the middle Don zone, where many isolated pockets of resistance are being progressively obliterated, the Russians said one Red army unit "wiped out a German garrison which had refused to retreat or surrender," seizing numerous prisoners, including a Nazi colonel.

Repeating the special communique's announcement of the capture of "the city and large railway station of Morozovskaya," the midnight bulletin said the Russians at that town captured many prisoners and "a large number of trophies, which are still being counted.

Fighting Around Stalingrad

The systematic annihilations of the remnants of 22 German divisions completely trapped before and at Stalingrad proceeded further Tuesday as Russian troops waged "stubborn battles for two important heights" west of the ruined Volga city, according to the midnight communique.

Charging under cover of an artillery barrage, Soviet infantrymen were declared to have broken into the enemy's defenses, capturing 20 gun emplacements, prisoners and weapons. German planes sought to aid the Nazis in the Stalingrad area, but nine were shot down Tuesday, it was announced.

Russian sharpshooters in Stalingrad's northern factory district were credited with exterminating more than 100 additional Germans.

The latest Red army victories, scored in the last two days, came after frantic Nazi counterassaults, carried out with reserves hurried to Russia all the way from France, were utterly routed with colossal losses in the Caucasus, the lower Don bend and the areas southwest and south of Stalingrad.

Russian recovery of Nalchik, a rail and road terminus in the shadow of 18,000-foot Mount Elbrus, was achieved Monday. It chopped off a Nazi spearhead which had once thrust far to the southeast to menace Ordzhonikidze and the Georgian military highway across the Caucasus Mountains before it was stopped and shoved back.

field of agricultural research. He discovered scores of uses for such lowly products as sweet potatoes, peanuts and clay. From the South's red clay and sandy loam he developed ink, pigments, cosmetics, paper paint and many other articles.

He will be buried in Tuckegee Cemetery, where also lies Booker T. Washington, founder and first president of the school. The body is to lie in state for a short time before the burial.

Some characterized him "The Ebony Pasteur"; others, "The most outstanding Negro of his time"; and still more, "An outstanding world character."

Whites Joined in Tribute

Many times whites joined members of his own race in tribute. On his fortieth anniversary as a member of the Tuskegee Institute (Ala.) faculty in 1937, a bronze bust of him was unveiled on the campus, a tribute to "Forty Years of Creative Research."

Carver never knew his father. While a child he and his mother were stolen from the Diamond Grove, Mo., farm, where he was born, and taken to Arkansas.

He was ransomed from his captors with a horse valued at $300. His mother was never heard of again.

A gangling boy, determined to better his lot, he worked his way thorugh public schools and then through Iowa State College, winning a bachelor's degree in 1894 and a master's degre in 1896. From there he went to Tuskegee Institute, founded by the late Booker T. Washington and later to become the world's largest institution of learning for the Negro.

Before he turned in 1936 to experimenting with peanut oils as a massage for after-treatment of infantile paralysis, Carver had developed scores of every day uses for sweet potatoes, peanuts, trees, clays, corn stalks, blossoms and even cow dung.

From the products of the South's red clay and sandy loam, he developed milk, ink plastics, cosmetics, paper, paint, and even imitation marble.

Visited By the Great

Presidents, Statesmen, leaders of industry and the humble called at Carver's laboratory. Henry Ford paused at an exhibit in Carver Memorial Museum to view the peanut oil massage display.

While he was best known for his contributions to agriculture, Dr. Carver was also listed among the great artists of his age.

One of his paintings hangs in Luxumbourg Gallery. Landscapes were his choice, and his "Curtis Browns" were pointed out with pride to all who called at Tuskegee while he was there. They were made with paints developed by his young assistant—from the magnolia blossom cone, the Osage orange, banana skins and coffee grounds.

Besides being chief of research and experiment at Tukegee Institute, Dr. Carver was a director of the Department of Agriculture research; collaborator in the division of plant industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture; member of the Royal Society of Arts, London; holder of the 1923 Spingarn Medal; and winner in 1939 of the Roosevelt Medal for achievement in science.

New Britain. There always are a number of Japanese ships at that base, 650 miles northwest of Guadalcanal, he said, but activities there are under constant observation.

(A Navy communique, announcing another of the daily attacks on Munda, disclosed also that the installations there consist not of one runway but several.)

(Knox, shedding some light on recent Navy communiques telling of a group of Japanese destroyers which approached Guadalcanal's north coast Saturday, said the warships did not make a landing but attempted to float some supplies ashore.

Attacked by U. S. Units

(Originally numbering 10, the destroyers were under attack by United States Flying Fortresses and dive bombers for 275 miles during their approach and by torpedo boats after their arrival, Knox said, and his statement and Navy communiques indicated that only five may have escaped unscathed.

(The dive-bombers set one of them afire and sank another at Rendova Island, 200 miles from Guadalcanal, while the torpedo boats scored hits on one and three possible hits on two more.

(A communique from General MacArthur's headquarters on Friday also told of a large concentration of Japanese ships at Rabaul and said United States four-motored bombers in a dawn attack hit three ships of 10,000, 8000 and 6000 tons with 1000-pound bombs.)

Possibly indicating that the main Japanese purpose may be defensive, the high official said Japanese land parties also were engaged in feverish construction of new defenses in the Solomons and in Portuguese-Dutch Timor to the northwest of Australia.

Recently the Japanese twice raided Merauk, 450 miles west of Port Moresby in Dutch New Guinea, where the Japanese communique claimed a new Allied base is under construction.

The Melbourne press attached particular importance to the Japanese aerial reconnaissance of the Queensland coast of the Australian northeastern mainland, however, and leaned to the interpretation that the Japanese had large amphibious operations in mind.

War Council Called

Prime Minister John Curtin, after receiving the official's report, conferred with senior members of the Australian naval staff, and called a meeting of the war council for next week.

Observers suggested that the report may have prompted the prime minister's representation "to the proper quarters" last week demanding strengthening of Allied Pacific forces and contending that the policy of regarding Hitler as the No. 1 enemy has been overdone.

If the Japanese intention was to run reinforcements to their beleagured forces at Sanananda in New Guinea the policy evidently was born in desperation.

The Japanese there were holding a few hundred yards of coast and General MacArthur reported today that he was regrouping his forces for a general attack after mopping up the Japanese forces to the eastward of Buna Village.

Allied medium bombers and light bombers already had turned on the heat, roaring over the salient and dropping 300-pound bombs on machine guns and dugouts.

R.A.F. Attacks Ruhr Second Night in Row

By the Associated Press

London, Jan. 5.—R. A. F. bombers, including Britain's biggest, sent their explosives roaring into targets in Germany's industrial Ruhr valley for the second successive night and started fires which glowed on the horizon long after the raiders had departed early today.

The Air Ministry in announcing the attack, which apparently was on a comparatively small scale, said two of the raiding planes failed to come back. On the usual ratio of losses this indicated a force of about 40 planes took part.

The Germans, in a radio announcement, said casualties and "damage to buildings in residential quarters" were caused. They claimed four of the raiders were shot down.

The Ruhr, which some pilots call "Happy Valley," was "spiteful as ever," said one returning flier who encountered heavy antiaircraft fire.

The Sunday attack by U. S. Flying Fortresses on St. Nazaire submarine nests, which initiated the 1943 Allied bombing program, meanwhile was said by the Daily Express to have resulted in the shooting down of 38 enemy fighting planes.

The paper said the Germans tried a new technique in their attacks on the Fortresses, diving head-on by pairs. Seven of the bombers were lost, the largest number shot down in a Fortress raid, but the Express said two of them were the victims of antiaircraft fire.

U. S. Air Force headquarters refused to comment on the report of the paper which said the raid was led by a general.

Marshall Congratulates MacArthur and Men

Allied Headquarters in Australia (Wednesday), Jan. 6 (AP).—Gen. Douglas MacArthur has received from Gen. George Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, this message of congratulations:

"We are stimulated and encouraged by the news of completing of the enemy's destruction in the Buna sector (of New Guinea). I know the terrific difficulties under which you have operated and the handicaps under which you initiated and staged your campaign. My thanks and congratulations to you and all concerned."

War Sidelights

China Studied As Seat of Jap War Plants

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 5.—A Tokyo dispatch broadcast today by the Berlin radio said plans are being made for moving a large part of the Japanese textile industry to China to utilize more effectively the vast resources of raw material and labor offered by China.

There have been several reports recently of the movement of Japanese plants to the Asiatic mainland. One reason was said to be to remove them from zones likely to be bombed when the Japanese homeland comes under attack.

Removal of the textile plants, however, would be part of a longer-range plan to fit China's cotton-growing areas and her abundance of cheap labor into the Japanese Empire's economy.

Italy Hits 'White Paper'

Bern, Switzerland, Jan. 5 (AP).—Virginio Gayda, who often speaks the Italian government's mind in the newspaper Il Giornale D'Italia, asserted today that the United States' White Paper was an attempt by President Roosevelt "to free himself of the immense responsibility for the gigantic scope the war has taken."

Tribe Wars on Nazis

Moscow, Jan. 5 (AP).—The Ingush tribe of the North Caucasus is reported to have declared a "Gazavatz," meaning Moslem holy war, against the Germans.

The army newspaper Red Star said that the dean of the tribe, a mullah named Gazi, proclaimed the holy war to the Ingush people from a minaret at the village of Bezorkino. He was reported to have received a rush of volunteers.

Americans Killed in War Put at 8531

Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

The United States has lost 8531 members of the armed forces killed since Pearl Harbor, the Office of War Information reported yesterday.

Total casualties have been 61,126, including killed, wounded, missing, interned in neutral countries and prisoners of Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Merchant Marine and the Philippine Scouts, OWI said.

Heaviest loss was in the Navy, which reported 4657 officers and men killed.

23,254 Navy Casualties

The Navy Department has reported or is in the process of reporting 23,254 casualties, excluding prisoners of war. Of this number 1769 naval officers and men are listed as wounded and 8970 are reported as missing.

The Marine Corps has listed 1201 officers and men as dead; 1653 as wounded, and 1943 as missing. Fifty-one members of the Coast Guard have met their death, 19 have been wounded and 134 are missing. The Merchant Marine list none of its personnel as wounded, but reports 429 dead and 2428 missing.

Of the Army's 36,528 casualties, 2193, including 469 Philippine Scouts, were killed, and 3948, including 747 Philippine Scouts, were wounded.

699 Return to Duty

Of these wounded 699 have returned to duty. There are 29,265 missing, including 11,352 Philippine Scouts. The Army also reports that 1016 of its members are prisoners of war and 106 are interned in neutral countries.

The total number of United States civilians interned, according to Japanese, German and Italian figures to date is 4226. Of this number 2648 are held by the Japanese, 1557 are held in Germany and 21 are held by the Italians.

In World War I the Army reported 233,184 battle casualties. Of this number 50,510 were killed or died of wounds. For the same period the Navy reported 871 casualties, none of whom came back.

'Too Busy Fighting' To Take Command Of Damaged Cruiser

Comdr. Herbert E. Schonland, who was "too damned busy" fighting fire and water to take command of the badly damaged cruiser San Francisco when all his superiors were killed or wounded, received the Congressional Medal of Honor yesterday from President Roosevelt.

Schonland was damage control officer of the cruiser in her action against numerically superior Japanese forces in the battle off Savo Island the night of November 12-13, and he sent word to Lieut. Comdr. Bruce McCandless on the bridge to take charge of the ship. From the interior of the vessel, he informed the bridge: "I'm too damned busy down here fighting fire and water."

The San Francisco, although heavily hit, survived a major battle and ultimately reached port.

President Reads Citation

Before the commander's wife and daughter Dianne, the President read this citation:

"For extreme heroism and courage above and beyond the call of duty as damage control officer of the U. S. S. San Francisco in action against greatly superior enemy Japanese forces in the battle off Savo Island, November 12-13, 1942.

"In the same violent night engagement in which all of his superior officers were killed or wounded, Lieutenant Commander Schonland was fighting valiantly to free the San Francisco of large quantities of water flooding the second deck compartments through numerous shellholes caused by enemy fire. Upon being informed that he was commanding officer, he ascertained that the conning of the ship was being efficiently handled, then directed the officer who had taken over that task to continue while he himself resumed the vitally important work of maintining the stability of the ship.

"In water waist-deep, he carried on his efforts in darkness illuminated only by hand-lanterns until water in flooded compartments had been drained or pumped off and watertight integrity had again been restored to the San Francisco.

Great Personal Valor

"His great personal valor and gallant devotion to duty at great peril to his own life were instrumental in bringing his ship back to port under her own power, saved to fight again in the service of her country."

It was in the Savo Island engagement that Rear Amiral Daniel J. Callaghan, commander of a task force and former White House Naval aide, lost his life when the bridge of the San Francisco was hit. The commander of the cruiser, Capt. Cassin Young, also was killed.

Schonland's home is at New London, Conn. The 42-year-old hero was graduated from the United States Naval Academy in 1925 and joined the San Francisco in June, 1939.

Commander McCandless was decorated with the Congressional Medal of Honor when the ship reached the port of San Francisco. Both men were lieutenant commanders at the time of the Savo action.

Young Sends His Photo to Britisher

An autographed picture of John Russell Young, president of the District Board of Commissioners, was sent last night to Platoon Sergt. G. F. Burke of the British Home Guard, who was grateful for American aid and who wanted a picture of the "Mayor of Washington."

Whatever hesitation the Postoffice Department might have had over sending the request to Young, to Chairman Jennings Randolph of the House District Committee or to Chairman Pat McCarran of the Senate District Committee, it was Young who answered the letter from the World War veteran.

Burke, who fought with doughboys in France in 1918 was unreserved in his praise of Americans as fighters. "They were tough scrappers and good pals," he wrote. "They don't make them any better."

"Mr. Mayor, these people of ours in England are grand," he continued. "They have had some rough times, but it has made us tougher and more determined than ever that these Axis tramps shall be well and truly licked. What I have seen has made me feel humble in the presence of simple heroism. We all thank the United States of America for what it is doing for Britain, and are proud to welcome your boys to our country. Maybe I shall find one of my pals in the last scrap who has come to help finish the job.

In autographing his picture, the "Mayor" wrote: "To Platoon Sergt. G. F. Burke, with best wishes and with real pride and appreciation."

WITH A BRITISH ACCENT—Keith Jopson, commercial secretary at the British Embassy, wearing an overcoat and muffler, dictates a letter to Lilly Johnston, likewise clad. This was after the fuel oil ran out and before a new shipment arrived. The Britons felt right at home

When the fuel oil didn't arrive, the Britishers at their Embassy pulled their overcoats down from the rack and wore them at their desks without saying a complaining word.

When the fuel oil did arrive yesterday and the newspapers phoned to ask how the diplomats down to the broad-A-using doorman had withstood the literal freeze, everyone was astonished.

And when photographers came to take pictures of them, working in their overcoats, they were very obliging—but seemed to think the American press a little strange.

"Please," said Mrs. Anthony Crossley, whose late husband was a member of Parliament, "don't let the photographs get to England. They would think we are terrible sissies."

They're trying to learn how word of it leaked out.

Maurice E. Bathurst, second secretary, said it was quite all right, that "many Englishmen just coming out here felt at home when the house got cold."

Mrs. Crossley, incredibly, said Washington's climate was "just lovely. Look at all of that wonderful sunshine out there now."

The British Press Information Service pointed out that under wartime conditions the average temperature in British homes is below 60 degrees. It wasn't said by the service that there is no complaining. It was left to be taken for granted.

The Post received its usual large number of phone calls yesterday from disturbed Washingtonians, a-jitter and twittery about the delivery of oil and of how cold the house might become some of these days.

No Peace Until Axis Defeat Is Complete, Halifax Says

By the Associated Press

Lord Halifax, British Ambassador, predicted yesterday an Axis effort to propose peace in order to avoid defeat, but, as for the United Nations, "we shall make no peace until the forces of the Axis, east and west, north and south, have suffered final, unmistakable and irrevocable defeat."

Halifax spoke at a meeting of the United Nations Information Board, an agency to which 18 of the Allies sent representatives.

"I am convinced that," Halifax said, "as the dream of Axis victory fades into the grim prospect of defeat, we shall receive from some quarter, in some shape, proposals for peace. But we have no intention of allowing Germany the opportunity once again to bring disaster upon the world, and so to any such proposals we can forecast our answer now."

The British envoy spoke to the information board primarily about the postwar world, emphasizing the necessity of some sort of a world organization to maintain peace and justice, plans for punishing Axis criminals responsible for atrocities, and the promotion of economic rehabilitation.

"The need of unified direction of war is obvious," he said, "the same unity so essential to victory will be just as necessary when the fighting stops, but, as we know from the unhappy experience of 1918, this may be more difficult to insure.

"There are many matters, with which we are all familiar and on which we must needs cooperate after victory. Apart from such immediate measures as relief, retribution and the disarmament of the enemy, there is the whole range of problems involved in the international structure of the future and the permanent economic rehabilitation of a world bled white by war."

in Libya, which usually is estimated to have 10 or 12 divisions.)

Meanwhile, an Allied communique said French forces in the Fondouk area, 50 miles southwest of Sousse in central Tunisia, had scored a telling defeat Sunday on the German tank force which made a surprise thrust there. The action was first announced yesterday.

Running unexpectedly into American-made antitank guns in the hands of the French and coming under an effective bombing and strafing attack of the United States Air Force, the Germans lost between 12 and 15 tanks and were forced to retire, the communique said.

Ten of the tanks were destroyed by the air attack and the rest by the antitank guns.

Reports from the sector said the French were holding a commanding hill south of Fondouk and that the enemy was regrouping about three miles to the east.

Intensifying their activity in that sector yesterday, United States bombers and fighters made several sweeps over the area and struck effective blows at Kairouan where they bombed the railway yards, and at Cherichera, a communique announced.

Four German planes were shot down in the sweeps, while a United States fighter and a Boston bomber were lost in an encounter over Cherichera.

(At the other end of the Allied front in Africa, Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's Libya Army said there was nothing to report. Middle East air forces were grounded by sandstorms.)

Fondouk, where the French forces beat off the surprise tank thrust Sunday with their American equipment and the aid of American Air Forces, is southeast of French-held Pichon, 53 miles west of Sousse on the Tunisian east coast.

Kairouan, where the air forces attacked yesterday, is 20 miles northeast of the Fondouk, and Cherichera is 6 miles northeast of the battle scene.

The French said today that there was nothing new to report from the ground forces in that sector.

In the north, too, bad weather continued to keep the opposing armies inactive.

Despite the minor success of Allied arms reported from time to time it seems apparent, however, that the Allies are faced with a major effort in the Tunisian theater.

Personal observations made on a 2100-mile tour of the war front lead to the conclusion that Adolf Hitler is determined to keep the Mediterranean blocked to the Allies by hanging on to his Tunisian corner, and has deployed thousands of German and Italian troops from Bizerte to Tripolitania to accomplish his purpose.

Moreover, there are more arriving all the time and they are favored by the few roads available for attack at this time of the year when heavy rains turn the intervening terrain into hub-deep mud and slippery hillsides.

Allied tank warfare is likely to be impossible until late February.

The Axis has concentrated probably 1000 planes into the general area, but it seems apparent that the German air force is losing its punch in the face of consistent Allied bombing attacks.

Huge RFC Loan Made Despite WPB Protest

By the Associated Press

A Senate subcommittee was informed yesterday that a $550,000 RFC loan was awarded to the Gulf Distilling Corp., of Gretna, La., for grain alcohol manufacturing equipment despite the disapproval of the War Production Board.

Chairman Gillette (Democrat) of Iowa, of a Senate agriculture subcommittee, read a letter from E. W. Reid, chief of WPB's chemical branch, who asserted the loan was authorized last March after Jesse Jones, president of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, was told that a former owner of the plant estimated that installation of grain-handling equipment "should cost no more than $50,000."

Letter Based on Memory

Reid sent his letter to Gillette in response to the chairman's inquiry. Reid testified yesterday that the letter was based on recollections of a former chief of the chemical branch's alcohol section, not otherwise identified in the correspondence.

This official, Reid wrote Gillette, received a telephone call at one time by Senator Herring (Democrat) Iowa, defeated this year, who wanted to know why the official was against granting the loan.

Reid said the official told Herring that since the company was already equipped to use molasses in alcohol manufacture "there appeared to be no justification for equipping it to use grain inasmuch as a molasses quota would be given to Gulf Distilling Corp. and it was expected that molasses would continue to be available in New Orleans.

Pressure Reported

Some time later, the letter continued, Sidney Weinberg of the WPB telephoned the alcohol chief asserting he had heard from "an outside source" that "considerable pressure" was being exerted on Jones to award the loan.

It was subsequent to this conversation, Reid continued, that the unnamed official told Jones "there appeared to be no adequate reason" for making the loan and that he had received oral advice from the American Distilling Co., former owner of the Gretna plant, that the grain-handling equipment should cost no more than $50,000.

The unidentified official reported that two or three days later he telephoned Jones and was told the RFC nad voted to authorize the $550,000 loan.

The introduction of the letter, dated last October 5, followed testimony disclosing an optimistic outlook for production of industrial alcohol in sufficient quantities to meet projected rubber and other war requirements in 1943 and 1944.

Assured Gallonage Cited

Dr. Walter G. Whitman, assistant director of WPB's chemical branch, testified that existing plants assured manufacture of 490 million gallons this year and 530 million next.

While conceding these figures were less than estimated requirements of 510 million this year and from 590 to 640 million in 1944, he said they did not take into consideration production of recently-approved midwestern alcohol plants and others to be approved. He added that the requirements estimates were based on maximum synthetic rubber production.

"All in all, we feel that production and requirements for the two years ahead are substantially in balance," he said.

Senator Says WPA Spreading Out Instead of Liquidating as Ordered

Senator McKellar (Democrat) of Tennessee, yesterday charged that the Work Projects Administration merely is "spreading out" among other Government agencies instead of liquidating, as it was expected to do under President Roosevelt's recent order.

The Senator made his charge after George Field, deputy WPA commissioner, disclosed before the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures that since issuance of Mr. Roosevelt's order December 4 the agency has spent 22 million dollars and expects to spend 20 million more this month.

McKellar Doubtful

Field insisted—although McKellar and the committee chairman, Senator Byrd (Democrat) of Virginia, remained unconvinced—that when all its projects were closed out or transferred to the Army, Navy, Civil Aeronautics Administration and other agencies, WPA would be able to return to the Treasury 80 million dollars in unexpanded appropriations and would realize 20 millions, or more, in liquidation of its property.

Byrd interposed the observation that if WPA was to be liquidated, as scheduled, by July 1, if it had 164 million dollars unobligated on December 1 and meant to save 80 million dollars, it must intend to spend 42 million dollars from February through June.

By liquidation of property, Field explained he meant assignment of materials, construction equipment and the like to the account of agencies that can use them with WPA being credited for their value.

'As I understand it, instead of liquidating, you are merely spreading out among other agencies," commented McKellar.

"If WPA is being carried on by other agencies of the Government, it will cost more than it does now."

Yesterday's hearing was the committee's first move in the new Congress to build up a record of the expenditures of agencies which it believes either should be eliminated or materially contracted. Its inaugural was somewhat marred, however, by the intrusion of protests from testifying officials of the Federal Works Agency, of which Field was one, that the questionnaire the committee distributed to nearly a score of bureaus was so framed as to require "misleading" answers.

Found "Terrifying"

Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, FWA administrator, related that the questionnaire was found by his subordinates to be so "terrifying" that they decided to keep track of costs incurred in answering it. These they calculated to be exactly $2,520.17.

Flushing, Byrd retorted that his committee wanted accurate information on classification of employes in the rocket-like expansion of the Federal establishment, couldn't get "the facts" from a "single agency of this Government" so decided to get the data itself by means of the questionnaire.

It was recalled that the Byrd committee recently focused attention on the complexity of uestionnaires issued by the Office of Price Administration and the Office of Defense Transportation in connection with rationing and price-fixing programs of the Government.

Ford Rouge Plant Workers Return to Jobs on Order

Detroit, Jan. 5 (AP).—Maintenance workers in the production foundry at the Ford Motor Co.'s Rouge plant, whose walkout last night made 9000 warworkers idle, returned to their jobs on the afternoon shift today after they were ordered back by union leaders.

In ordering a return to work, the executive board of the United Automobile Workers (C. I. O.), Local 600, said the union would insist on "appropriate discipline" for the men responsible for the unauthorized strike.

A company spokesman expressed belief that their return would make possible resumption of normal operations. Work on vital armor plate for Army tanks already had been affected, Army officials said.

G.O.P. Pledges Tax Reforms, Reduced Costs

Through their legislative leader, Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr., of Massachusetts, House Republicans pledged themselves yesterday to devote their energies in the Seventy-eighth Congress to cooperation in winning the war, curtailment of Federal expenses, overhauling of the tax structure and preservation of constitutional government."

Those were highlights of a statement issued by Martin on behalf of the strengthened minority, numbering 208 of the 435 House members.

Other objectives in the Republican program included:

Preservation of "private enterprise from destruction."

Protection "of our free press."

Ousting of "special privilege seekers from entrenched positions in Government."

Curbing of "the reckless granting of blanket powers and blank checks."

Elimination of unnecessary bureaus and agencies.

Tax collection on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Release of "every third Federal employe in the regular establishments for war work."

Creation of Congressional committees to deal with aviation development and postwar problems.

"A fair deal and an opportunity to survive" for small business.

Martin said he was "sure we will find others in the Congress not of our political faith who will unite with us in these American objectives for the common good."

"We have been given a definite job by the American people," the Republican leader asserted. "The heavily burdened taxpayers are demanding action, and so far as we Republicans are concerned, they are going to get it."

He saw as the "first important step" of the new Congress the curtailment of "reckless granting of blanket powers and blank checks" and the halting of authorization of large expenditures by some "bureaucratic chief" instead of by Congress.

Laws which tax, regulate and regiment the people, he said, must "come from their Congress and not from bureaucrats."

Martin said that putting into effect by decrees proposals rejected by Congress was a violation of the Constitution, and promised Republicans would "not tolerate this way of destroying constitutional government."

Tax reforms should not be delayed, Martin asserted, promising a drive for "a better planned and more equitable tax program."

On the general subject of taxation, he had this to say:

"High taxes are necessary but they must not be punitive. They must not destroy initiative or business expansion. The chief purposes of government after the war must be to bring more prosperity to the people, more production at lower costs, better jobs at better wages. This can be accomplished only through a wise tax system which will promote our fixed policy of building a better civilization on the foundation of an ever-expanding private enterprise system. The job of collecting taxes due makes it imperative for us to have some system of pay-as-we-go."

Congress must develop a "carefully considered program" of its own for postwar days and problems, he declared. Adding that "the bureaucrats and their thousands of employes are preparing their plans for this 'new day' after the war."

"We shall not fail," he concluded, in performing "the job of saving the American way of life and of being a compelling force for the efficient conduct of the war and for sound government."

Her Apologies to the Press

PLAYWRIGHT-CONGRESSWOMAN EXPLAINS—Clare Boothe Luce, Congresswoman-elect from Connecticut, thrusts her hands deep into the pockets of her red wool dress and tells reporters she is sorry about missing them Monday night upon arrival at Union Station. A late train delayed her for an appointment, she said. As for her post in the Capitol, Mrs. Luce said she came here to help "win the war as rapidly, efficiently and economically as possible" and elect a Republican President in 1944

Elusive Mrs. Luce Fails to Let Down Her Hair

By Robert W. Harvey
Post Staff Writer

Representative-elect Clare Boothe Luce, Connecticut's gift of glamour to the Seventy-eighth Congress, held her first press conference as a Congresswoman yesterday. The female animal was dominant.

The elusive Mrs. Luce, who left reporters waiting at the station gate when she came to town Monday night, slipped into the crowded ante-room of her suite in the new House Office Building only a few minutes late. She stood with her back to the wall and the female press closed in, flexing their fingernails.

The male reportorial contingent mostly stood around and enjoyed the ensuing interview which combined all the more interesting aspects of a Vassar home-coming weekend, the powder-room scene from "The Women" and moving day on the third floor rear.

The girls started off with a little verbal scratching about Monday night's run around, which still rankled. Mrs. Luce's parried, but was harried. She explained that her train was two hours late and she had appointments. One of the gals, who apparently had held a stop watch on the train, said it was only 22 minutes late, and did Mrs. Luce instruct her secretary to slam the receiver in their ears when they telephoned?

After a while they softened up and let her off with questions like: "Why did you want to run for Congress?" Clare was probably wondering herself at that point. "When are you going to make your maiden speech?" "Do you think you ought to get on the Foreign Relations Committee, even if you are a junior member?"

Mrs. Luce sidestepped comment on major political issues until she had a chance to "look into them," but in all put up a good defense and acquitted herself well. She said she would abide by the rules of the House on committees and would make her first speech when she had something to say. Generally, she displayed all the decorum fitting to a Congressional freshman, which probably disappointed many.

Hilarious Show

Adding to the excitement was the fact that Mrs. Luce was in the process of moving in, so that workmen were plodding in and out with desks and chairs and similar paraphernalia throughout the proceedings. Then there were the newsreel men who had to take their pictures during the interview and were constantly dodging between shoulders, perching on the top of desks among potted ferns and old newspapers, and bathing the entire scene with searching white lights.

Then there was also a gent in a woolen muffler who kept asking Mrs. Luce about sending dried fruit and canned milk to England without taking the water and air out first, or something like that. It was all somewhat confusing but hilarious.

Fashion note: Our technical advisers differed on whether Mrs. Luce was wearing flannel or wool crepe, but all agreed that it was very red, very simple and very fetching. The blonde Luce locks were swept up and over, crowned with some black bows which may have been a hat, but were more likely a hair ribbon. She also wore a gold ring set with an oversize pearl and carried a square yard of red and white checked silk handkerchief.

The men definitely approved and voted the whole thing a capital show.

Democrats Slap At Bureaucrats

talked freely with his congressional leaders before taking any decisive step. Mr. Roosevelt pulled no punches in his legislative conferences, he went on, and even consulted with the leaders on his messages to Congress, accepting their suggestions.

But this was not true of many of the President's subordinates who sent legislation to Congress and expected it to be enacted without consultation with party chieftains, Rayburn stated.

Democrats last night gave evidence of apprehension lest they should be unable to round up enough members to insure the re-election of Rayburn as Speaker. The House votes on the speakership today with Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr., of Massachusetts, the Republican "candidate" by virtue of his nomination at the minority conference.

The Democrats renominated Rayburn and reelected as their floor leader, Representative John W. McCormack of Massachusetts. The Democrats hold 222 seats in the new House, the Republicans 208, but a large number of Democratic absentees presented the numerical possibility of election of Martin, an eventuality which the Republicans not only do not expect, but do not want with the responsibility it entails.

Leaders of Democratic State delegations yesterday were asked to get in touch with all absentees in order to insure fullest possible attendance today when the House elects not only a Speaker, but may vote on a majority proposal to retain all sitting Democrats on the Ways and Means Committee.

When told by reporters of majority intentions, Martin, who wants fuller Republican committee representation, said he "might object," and added: "It looks like we will have an interesting afternoon." Asked if he expected there would be inter-party harmony in the new Congress, Martin said:

"Yes. Right from the start."

Representative Kennedy of New York focused attention on Democratic concern over its slim majority when he got up in the caucus, observed that two new members, Representatives Curley, former Boston mayor, and Philbin were absent from McCormack's Massachusetts delegation, and asked McCormack if it would be all right for members of the New York delegation to attend the funeral today of former Representative Caroline O'Day. McCormack replied:

"To answer my good friend from New York, I will tell him that his presence is imperative."

The Republican leader disclosed also that Representative Burdick of North Dakota, backed by his colleague, Representative Lemke, served notice that he would move to amend House rules so that 145 signatures rather than 218, as at present, would be adequate to discharge a committee from consideration of legislation by petition.

Gov. Jones Brands Henderson's Note As 'Ridiculous'

Baton Rouge, La., Jan. 5 (AP).—Gov. Sam Jones declared today that National Price Administrator Leon Henderson's letter accusing him of encouraging gasoline rationing regulation violations was "ridiculous" and "agitated by personal pique."

In a statement answering a letter from Henderson, Jones declared he fully intended to maintain efforts to obtain sufficient supplies of gasoline "for necessary transportation of our farmers, war laborers and essential workers."

"Leon Henderson's letter is ridiculous," the statement said. "It is unfortunate that Henderson at this time has been agitated by personal pique to make imprudent statements calculated to cause disunity when there is so much need for a united front.

Henderson made public his letter to Governor Jones in Washington yesterday, accusing Jones with "direct encouragement of violation of regulations."

"LISTEN, ADOLF, THAT MUSCLE'S TALKIN'!"

"So you thought we were soft! American workers couldn't take it, you said. Your propaganda pictured us as dandies - ridiculed our individual initiative and personal liberty as handicaps to efficiency. Adolf, you're wrong! And if your spies tell you the truth, you know it!"

That's the American Railroad Worker talking - 1,400,000 strong.

Yes, the railroad workers know what's at stake. Their uniforms may be overalls - but they're war workers just the same. Civil Service Pay Reform Demanded

Raise Inequalities Prompt Action by Byrd and McKellar

Democratic Senators Byrd and McKellar yesterday joined in demands for "drastic reform" of existing Civil Service job classifications after hearing from Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, head of the Federal Works Agency, that the present system penalizes subordinate administrative ability and accords wage advancement to supervisors frequently because they are able to surround themselves with large staffs.

Fleming Attacks Tendency

Fleming, appearing before Byrd's Joint Committee on the Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, attacked a tendency on the part of the Civil Service Commission to be guided on its wage classification decisions on the number of persons subordinate officials have working for them rather than on individual skill and ability. He declared:

"One problem which confronts every Federal agency endeavoring to operate efficiently, is the present application of standards under the Classification Act. It is my belief that the act itself is sound. However, the tendency to give special emphasis to the number of persons supervised results in a constant effort on the part of supervisory personnel in many agencies to build up unnecessarily large organizational units, for only in that way does it seem possible to raise the grade levels of the supervisors.

Expansion a Factor

"This condition has been aggravated by the great expansion of various defense agencies which seem to be able to offer higher grade than can be secured in the Federal Works Agency for many of our positions.

General Fleming told the committee, which for several weeks has been quietly investigating "pirating" practices among Federal recruiting officers, that the problem of wage inequalities in the Government was even more serious in the stenographic and statistical grades than it is among higher grade employes.

Present classification standards, he declared, are "extremely serious and result in an unnecessarily large turnover among departments." Fleming recommended raising standards "now applied by the Classification Act for these lower grade positions where this turnover is heavy."

At Special Disadvantage

"The highly skilled professional employe is especially at a disadvantage in this race for preferment," the general continued. "He may be, and frequently is, employed wholly in an advisory capacity. He may have no staff at all under his immediate supervision.

"In many cases, indeed, he does not even have the services of a full-time stenographer. His advice and counsel result in the saving of very large sums of money to the Government. Yet he frequently has the experience of seeing the man across the hall, engaged only in routine work, promoted year after year through the higher grades simply by the accumulation of a large staff, while he remains behind."

Not through scenes of sanguine revolution, dismal native poverty, and night club rhumba artists, but in portrait studies, soft pastoral scenes and rococo architecture will Latin America be seen today when the First Inter-American Photographic Exhibit opens in the Pan American Union Building.

First of its kind, the exhibit will embrace contributions — originally specified as 21—from all the Latin-American countries except 3 and some 20 pictures from the United States. One picture will be selected from each country tonight as a prize winner. Showing hours are 8 p. m. to 10 p. m.

Idea for the exhibit was developed about two years ago by the Arlington Camera Club. The club suggested to the Pan American Union that cultural agencies, if not individual photographers, be reached and asked to sumbit work for a comprehensive show in this country.

Of particularly high quality is the work of Emelio Bonifaz of Ecuador, Jose L. Morales of El Salvador, Arturo Penalva of Argentina, Alejo Grelland of Argentina and Efrain Castro of Colombia.

When the show closes here January 24, it will be sent to Baltimore and thence to New York.

Airway Express Record Smashed

Air express poundage carried by the Nation's domestic airlines during October smashed all existing monthly records for the eighth successive month, the Air Express Division of Railway Express Agency reported yesterday.

A record total of 2,357,094 pounds was handled during the month, an increase of 123 per cent over the same month a year ago. Shipments totaled 129,396, up 8.9 per cent over October, 1921, while gross revenue for the month showed an increase of 142 per cent.

ceremonies. As he shook his son's hand, both faces lighted up with proud smiles.

The mission carried out by young Nimitz was kept secret, but the citation described it as a highly hazardous one in Japanese waters.

"Your efforts," said the citation, "contributed greatly to the success of your submarine in many actions during which much enemy shipping was sunk or greatly damaged."

Lieutenant Nimitz is 27 years old and was graduated from Annapolis in 1936.

Until yesterday, the two had not seen each other for three and a half years. Lieutenant Nimitz was at Manila at the outbreak of war and since then has been assigned to Far Eastern waters. The admiral and his son were last together when young Nimitz graduated from submarine school.

Lieutenant Nimitz declined to be interviewed, but said he chose the submarine service because his father started there and the admiral had told him the service offered the best chance to obtain command of a vessel.

"I'm hoping for that, young Nimitz said.

Sisters Live in Washington

He has not seen his wife and daughter, living in Vallejo, Calif., for 15 months. His child is 2½ years old. (His sisters, Catherine and Nancy, live at 2222 Q Street, Washington. They have not seen him since 1939.)

Lieutenant Nimitz is a strapping 6-footer with red hair. He is more slender than but has a decided resemblance to his father. He displayed the same dexterity as his father in fencing off reporters' questions.

Asked if he thought his father were a great admiral, young Nimitz replied:

"I've complete confidence in him."

In the other award of the day, Captain Small received the Navy Cross for "extraordinary heroism" in an action in which a heavy Jap cruiser, a transport and four enemy destroyers were sunk. Another cruiser was badly damaged and several other Jap vessels were probably sunk in the night engagement off Savo Island.

"Due to his aggressiveness and determined action and through his skill and devotion to duty," said Small's citation, "a superior Japanese force heading toward Gaudalcanal was destroyed or turned back."

Eight Miners Killed In Dust Explosion.

Ducktown, Tenn., Jan. 5 (AP). Eight men were killed and the lives of more than two-score others endangered here today in a mid-afternoon explosion at the Tennessee Copper Co. mine.

L.J. Rosenwald Resigns WPB Directorship

Lessing J. Rosenwald resigned yesterday as director of the War Production Board's conservation division because he was "not completely in accord" with a recent reorganization which placed his functions in a new war resources agency.

Rosenwald asked WPB Chairman Donald M. Nelson to relieve him of his duties not later than February 1.

He said that in addition to lacking accord with the reorganization, he wanted to give Nelson a free hand in setting up the new war resources agency.

Nelson, in accepting the resignation, said Rosenwald had "done a good job—a fine job."

"The results of the scrap campaign speak for themselves," Nelson said. "He has done very effective work and I regret very much that he has decided to leave.

Rosenwald, a native of Chicago, was for many years actively connected with Sears Roebuck & Co., resigning in 1939 as chairman of the board.

Taxation Clinic Opens Tonight At National U.

A "taxation clinic," designed to throw light on several sides of the tax problem in coming weeks, will begin at 6:30 p. m. today with a discussion on the "Highlights of the Revenue Act of 1942," led by Stanley S. Surrey, tax legislative counsel of the Treasury Department.

Sponsored by National University and conducted by Dr. Milton L. Beldinger, the clinic will be held each Wednesday night at the school of law. Future talks will be made by Randolph Paul of the Treasury Department, Dr. Gerhard Colm of the Budget Bureau, Senator Robert Taft, Representative Jerry Voorhis and others.

Surrey, the author of a number of magazine articles on taxation, entered Government service in 1933 with the NRA and has been with the Treasury Department since 1937.

8 Train Cars Derailed, No Injuries Reported

Omaha, Jan. 5 (AP).—The Union Pacific Railroad said that eight cars on its westbound Los Angeles limited were derailed in a collision in a tunnel at Hermosa, Wyo., early today, but that no injuries were reported to the 136 passengers aboard.

The railroad said another train struck the rear end of the Los Angeles limited. Speed of the limited was estimated at from 10 to 12 miles an hour and the other train from 18 to 20 miles an hour.

Hospitals Here Get Priorities For Expansion

to care for scattered cases. He said that preliminary physician's examinations disclosed whether or not a home delivery would be in order, and whether obstetrical nurses could handle the case. Such nurses, he said, have been very successful in many parts of the United States, Kentucky for example and in many foreign countries.

Present at the WPB session yesterday was Commissioner Guy Mason, who agreed to work with local hospital authorities to determine the best manner of utilizing all available space.

From local health authorities it was learned that expansion of Glenn Dale sanitarium and removal of tubercular patients from Gallinger to Glenn Dale, a possibility suggested by WPB, was unlikely, largely because of the impossibility of getting adequate personnel at Glenn Dale. Local men also indicated that Upshur Hospital would be opened, as originally planned for the care of arrested cases of tuberculosis rather than as a maternity hospital.

Still awaiting WPB action is a proposal to enlarge Sibley Hospital by remodeling six residences owned by the hospital into nurses quarters, thus making room for 58 original beds. It was brought out at a meeting of the Senate District Committee last week that upon the request of the Federal Works Agency, Sibley vacated the six apartments as of December 1, a move which is costing the hospital $450 a month in rent. Maverick pointed out that the request for priorities did not reach WPB until December 8. In a report on Sibley Hospital, WPB's surveyors said that the hospital "was asked to submit a request for funds for construction by a representative of the Federal Works Agency."

Officials Seek Solution

Also awaiting priorities is a request from Montgomery County General Hospital at Sandy Spring, Md., which would involve a $115,270 grant for new wings.

No application has yet reached WPB for expansion of Alexandria Hospital, where WPB surveyors found conditions "terribly crowded."

At yesterday's meeting, various members of the group of Federal and District officials, hospital heads and medical men, agreed to attempt to solve various phases of the problems, notably that of location of a locked hospital for venereal disease cases referred by court action.

Solutions eventually reached will be reported to the Senate District Committee. When last week's session was adjourned, another meeting was scheduled for this week, but it will not be held today, as originally thought, because of the opening of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

30% of Butter Set Aside for War

Agriculture said.

Last November, half of old cold-storage butter was withheld from the market by order of the War Production Board to create a stockpile for military use. Wickard's order applies to fresh stocks of butter.

Every manufacturer producing more than 12,000 pounds of creamery butter a month is affected by the order. Between 3 and 5 per cent of all butter producers were exempt.

The butter order does not necessarily mean that butter rationing will be ordered, although a Department of Agriculture official admitted that the question "is being studied."

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics recently issued a report predicting that butter and other edible fats—and cooking oils—would probably be rationed in 1943.

Officials point out that the butter shortage has been created by an unusually heavy civilian demand during 1942, combined with a 5 per cent drop in production and increased military demands. Shipments to Russia during 1942 made up only 1 per cent of total butter production, officials said.

As a result of the present supply situation, retailers have been compelled to dole out butter to their customers—often in quarter-pound lots. It is generally agreed that if this situation continues for a long period, some sort of butter rationing will be instituted.

The Army-Navy Production Award, which has been called the Distinguished Service Cross of industry, was presented to the Army Map Service here yesterday afternoon at an outdoor ceremony witnessed by about 2000 employes of the service.

Assistant Secretary of War John J. McCloy made the presentation, which is given for extraordinary production, cooperation between management and workers, and cooperation with the Government.

"This award is an honor that can be coveted by any organization," said Maj. Gen. Thomas M. Robins, Acting Chief of Engineers, in congratulating Col. W. A. Johnson, commanding officer of the Army Map Service, and Col. H. D. Loper, chief of the intelligence branch of the troops division of the Office of the Chief of Engineers. The Army-Navy E has gone to only about 1 per cent of the industries furnishing supplies to the Government.

Emblem Displayed

Before the banner was raised on the flagstaff, it was displayed by William H. Pistel, oldest employe, and Mrs. Anne McEnally.

During the same ceremony, the plant raised the War Department flag, awarded to it for the sale of bonds, for the first time.

Map Service workers, more and more of whom are now women for a reason graphically shown by the 246 stars on the plant's service flag, each received a silver E pin. Rear Admiral C. H. Woodward, U. S. N., retired, made this presentation, which was received by Thomas L. Sharkey, representing the civilian management of the plant, and Miss Bertha A. Hall, representing the workers.

The production award was granted to the Army Map Service, not only for its reproduction and lithographic work, but also for the work of the cartographic section, which handles the preparation of new maps and charts.

Candidates Trained

At this plant graduates from officer candidate schools are trained in lithography and other phases of map making. Later they are assigned to mobile map units which operate in the field and furnish "on the spot" maps for combat forces.

Special fluorescent inks are used in reproducing maps for fliers. These inks, which glow under the dim lights of a cockpit and can be read through the heavy, colored goggles sometimes worn by pilots, are used during night flying operations when strong light is not available and ordinary charts frequently cannot be read.

At present the plant is turning out three or four million maps a month. A single shipment recently sent "somewhere outside the continental United States," amounted to 110 tons.

Gasoline Blast Kills 8, Hurts 4

Massena, N. Y., Jan. 5 (INS).—An explosion of gasoline in a can today set afire a restaurant filled with war plant workers en route to an aluminum plant and brought death to eight men and injuries to four others.

The explosion occurred when someone struck a match following a power failure, which doused the small restaurant's lights. The victims had been passengers on a Potsdam-Massena bus which customarily stopped at the restaurant. Authorities said the explosion occurred when a can of gasoline being purchased from the proprietor by two men slipped. The contents spilled on the floor just as the match was lighted and burst into flames, destroying the building.

Store Replies To OPA Suit On Price Rules

The Woodward & Lothrop department store asserted that it had substantially obeyed all the price ceiling rules of the Office of Price Administration, in an answer filed yesterday in District Court to an OPA injunction suit.

The company's answer was submitted by Attorneys Nelson T. Hartson, Edmund L. Jones and Howard Boyd. They told the court that the store "fully approved of and concurred in the purposes" of price control, in the interest of national defense and security.

The answer denied committing any violation of the regulation, and declared that any infractions that occurred were trivial and resulted from the complexity of the OPA rules and the huge volume of business (25,000 sales a day.)

The OPA asked the court for an injunction ordering the store to obey the price regulations, charging violations in several departments.

Col. R. K. Mellon And Wife Adopt Fourth Child

Chicago, Jan. 5 (AP).—County court records disclosed today that Lieut. Col. Richard King Mellon, president of the Mellon National Bank in Pittsburgh, and his wife have adopted a 5-months-old boy from the Cradle, well known child-placing institution in suburban Evanston.

Attorney Ralph Ellsworth Batten, who handled the adoption proceedings, said the Mellons had adopted three other children, a boy and two girls, during the last four years. Their new son, he said, would be named Seward Prosser Mellon.

The Mellons were in Chicago briefly yesterday and then returned to Washington, where Colonel Mellon is stationed. Their permanent home is Ligonier, Pa.

Elimination of 'A' Gas Books Hinted

ernment can solve this anytime but the only answer we can get is 'we are studying the situation.'"

The proposed boost in retail gasoline prices is prompted, Sol A. Herzog, general counsel of the Eastern States Gasoline Dealers Conference, said, by higher business costs, a steady drop in motoring and the prospect of more drastic curtailments.

Herzog said that the dealers had handled themselves well during the gasoline crisis but that more and more dealers were being forced out of business.

"The fiction that the Petroleum Administration for War," he said, "is to determine the amounts available and that OPA is to determine how they are to be apportioned out—and all this subject to the intervention of several other agencies—is rapidly wearing thin."

In Boston, Frederick W. Moore, executive secretary of the Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Massachusetts, said that dealers were asking for a 1.5 cents increase per gallon now and a larger increase if "A" coupons were eliminated.

Herzog said his group had made the proposal for higher prices to the OPA through Harry Wainwright, Washington, D. C., member of the conference. He said an executive committee meeting would be held Sunday to survey the entire situation.

Oil Moving Through 531-Mile Pipeline

Petroleum Administrator Harold L. Ickes announced yesterday that oil had started moving through the 531-mile Texas-to-Illinois pipeline although it will be at least February 1 before the pipeline is completed.

Ickes said the line-filling operation was begun New Year's Eve, but actual delivery of the first oil at the Norris City, Ill., terminal must await repair and completion of a section crossing the Mississippi River which was washed out by flood waters.

"By pumping oil into the lower section of the pipeline while the break is being repaired we shall be able to save much of the time lost through damage," Ickes said.

Pending completion of the eastward extension of the line from Norris City to New York-Philadelphia terminals, railroad tank cars will transship Norris City deliveries to the East.

At the same time the Office of Price Administration formally authorized issuance of "C" gasoline rations to salesmen of "essential commodities" except in 17 Eastern States and the District of Columbia.

OPA some time ago announced that the action would be taken at the request of Rubber Director William Jeffers.

U. S. Ship Output Hits 4 a Day

746 vessels made up the 8,090,800 tons of 1942 shipping including 542 Liberty ships, 62 tankers, 62 long-range standard C-type ships, 55 cargo ships for the British, 5 coastal freighters, 5 ore carriers and 15 special-type ships.

"Every world record for merchant ship construction was broken in 1942," Land said.

1942 Output Set Record

"At no time in history—not even during the peak of the great shipbuilding program of the last war, when 5,500,000 tons were delivered in 12 months—has any country ever built as much merchant tonnage in a single year," Land said.

Obviously proud of his 1942 record, Land emphasized that one of the factors that made the record possible was the standardization of design without making changes after the start of production.

Other factors cited by him included extensive prefabrication, or the building of large sections of a ship before they are carried to the shipways, adaptation of assembly line methods, supported by a flow of materials procured through central purchasing, increased use of welding instead of riveting, resulting in saving of manpower, faster construction, saving of steel, and a stronger ship structure.

Land singled out for special mention "close cooperation between labor and management, and their willingness not only to adopt new methods and ideas, but also to pledge themselves to eliminate work slowdowns or stoppages."

"The morale in most of our shipyards has been excellent, and has had an important part in attaining great production," Land said.

Only "fly in the ointment" has been absenteeism, which he characterized as a "serious problem."

Record-holding shipyard for the year was the Oregon Shipbuilding Corp., a yard at Portland, Oreg., operated by Henry J. Kaiser.

Land said that it produced 113 Liberty ships representing 1,219,300 deadweight tons in 1942. Second for the year was another Kaiser yard—California Shipbuilding Corp., at Wilmington, Calif.—which produced 109 Liberty ships totaling 1,175,900 tons.

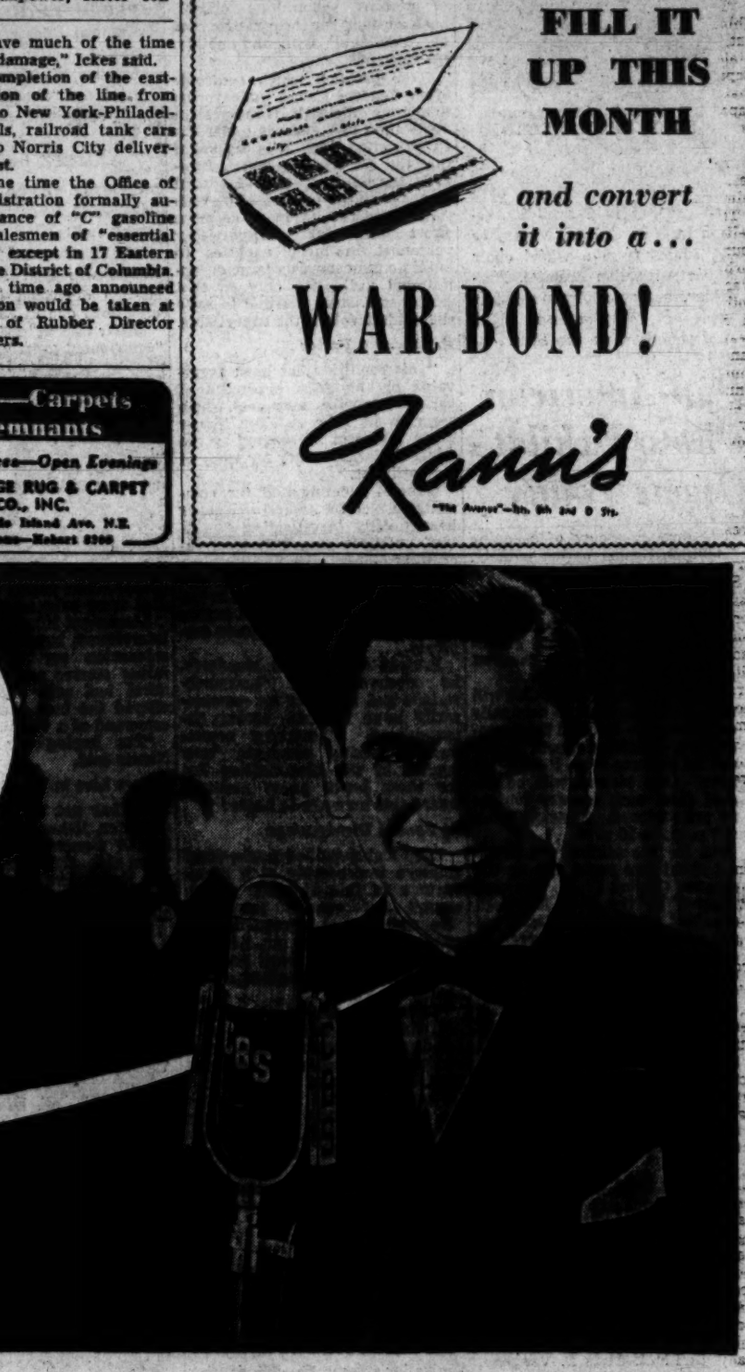
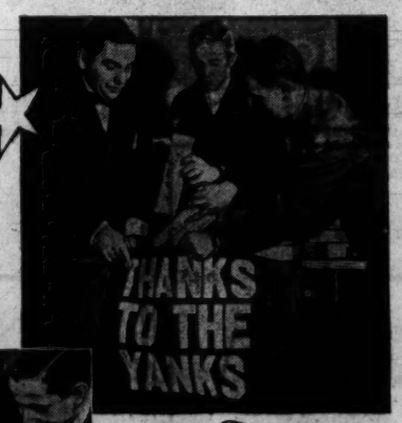
THIS IS BOB HAWK BROADCASTING—AND I WANT TO TELL YOU...
You don't have to go to the radio show to send your own personal
"Thanks to the Yanks"



"...your dealer will send Camels for you to any Yank you want to thank...son, brother, sweetheart, pal, anybody anywhere."

Here's the Duffle Bag into which the Camels go when the contestant fails to answer the question correctly. The contents of the Duffle Bag, after the show, are sent to various service centers for free distribution to the Yanks. Even when you can't answer, you still send thanks to the Yanks. Over 585,000 Camels have been sent at this moment of going to press.



Think hard, Mr. Murray!... Snapped here is Martin H. Murray of New Bedford, Mass. trying hard to answer his question and send his nephew at Fort Bragg 2,000 Camels. A few seconds after the camera clicked, he got the answer. And his nephew got the smokes.

Here's Mrs. Wilford C. Long, of Portland, Oregon, very happy over the fact that she's given the right answer to one of Bob Hawk's questions on Thanks to the Yanks. A certain officer in the Army Medical Corps overseas will be happily surprised with 2,000 Camels.

"MAYBE you've been in the audience of Camel's new Thanks to the Yanks program in the Columbia Broadcasting Studio in New York. Maybe you were even in the show. Or maybe you heard it on the air.

"Anyway, you probably know that when a quiz question I give out is answered correctly, we send up to 3,000 Camels to any service man the contestant names. Everybody has a lot of fun—in addition to providing soldiers, sailors, marines, and coast guardsmen around the globe a lot of free smoking fun—with Camels, their favorite cigarette.* Tune in this Saturday night.

"But... you can send your thanks to the Yanks—show or no show! Your dealer has complete mailing instructions for all branches of the service. See him today and thank a Yank with a carton of Camels. It's so easy... and honestly, his appreciation will kindle a very special glow in the region of your heart."

Japan Struck, Then Italy Hit Ethiopia

By Joseph J. Cloud
Post Staff Writer

(The third article of a series.)

The sands of conquest ran bewilderingly fast.

In January, 1936, Secretary Hull, during a conversation with the British Ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay, said that "the most incomprehensible circumstance in the whole modern world is the ability of dictators, overnight almost, to stand 35 million Italians and 65 million Germans on their heads and so dominate their mental processes that they arise the next morning and insist on being sent to the first-line trenches without delay."

It appeared that this was undoubtedly a fact, however incredible. The American "White Paper" published this week by the Department of State, summarizing the decade of 1931-41, reveals how surely the race against aggression had then already been lost.

The decade had opened with Japan's protestations of peaceful intentions coincident with her attack upon Manchuria.

"The United States Minister to China," the "White Paper" points out, "reported to Secretary of State Stimson, in a telegram dated September 22, 1931, his opinion that this was 'an aggressive act by Japan,' apparently long-planned, and carefully and systematically put into effect. Minister Johnson found no evidence that it was the result of accident or the act of minor and irresponsible officials."

This, of course, was quite unbelievable. The world was profoundly shocked, profoundly disturbed, and profoundly somnolent. War had begun in the Orient, but nothing of this sort was possible in Europe or the Americas. The League of Nations immediately began deliberations on the Manchurian incident, urged by the United States that it should not "relax its vigilance" and informed by Secretary Stimson that this Government, "acting independently, would 'endeavor to reinforce what the League does'" because of its adherence to the Kellogg-Briand Pact and the Nine-Power Treaty "'should a time arise when it would seem advisable to bring forward these obligations.'"

Sixteen months later the League Assembly adopted the Lytton report condemning Japanese aggression. Within two months Japan had given notice of intention to withdraw from the League. The forces of peace moved ponderously; those of aggression wasted little time.

By 1934 the fever had spread to Europe. In September of that year Breckinridge Long, United States Ambassador at Rome, began a series of reports upon Italy's preparations to invade Ethiopia.

"Ambassador Long said he was convinced that preparations of an unusual sort were under way," the "White Paper" says; "he considered it quite possible that these preparations related to Ethiopia.

Troops on the March

"A few months later, February 14, 1935, he reported . . . that there were indications of general preparations for an extensive campaign . . . that factories for the manufacture of trucks, tanks and artillery around Milan were working night and day; that supplies and military forces were moving clandestinely; that concerted effort was being made to prevent any information getting out as to the size or general nature of the shipments; that troop movements were at night; that embarkation was proceeding from several cities; that he had received reports that 30,000 troops had left Naples. . . ."

As these reports continued both President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull made overtures to preserve peace, the President through a personal message to Premier Mussolini stating "that the Government and people of the United States felt that failure to arrive at a peaceful settlement of this dispute and a subsequent outbreak of hostilities would be a world calamity, the consequences of which would adversely affect the interests of all nations."

In September, 1935, Secretary Hull publicly outlined the attitude of this Government, stating "that we believed international controversies could and should be settled by peaceful means . . . that every nation had the right to ask that no other nation subject it to the hazards and uncertainties that must inevitably accrue to all from resort to arms by any two."

In October Italy invaded Ethiopia.

Preventive measures having failed, efforts then were made to bring Italy to her senses and restore the unruly peace. Drastic measures were taken. The League applied sanctions. President Roosevelt invoked the Neutrality Act and proclaimed an arms embargo. Italy continued upon her determined course. Conquest rode high.

The diplomatic efforts to restrain Italy continued through the succeeding years, as Mussolini and Hitler grew more and more friendly, and finally concluded an outright military alliance. Every appeal to reason was refused. By 1940, when the conflagration had spread over Europe, the United States Ambassador was not even permitted to deliver a message from President Roosevelt to Mussolini. Then, as now, the dictator was unable to "take it." By June, 1940 Il Duce was squirming.

In reply to another of President Roosevelt's pleas, the "White Paper" reveals, "Mussolini confirmed the foreign minister's statement that the decision to enter the (European) war had already been taken.

"He said it was 'of no concern to him' that the entry of Italy into the war would mean the redoubling of American efforts to help the Allies. Finally, he said he preferred not to receive any 'further pressure' from the President; this would only 'stiffen his attitude.'"

In Judge's Hands

Kuhn Spurns Chance to Defend Self

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 5.—Fritz Kuhn, fat and 47, one-time boss of the German-American bund, today gave up the chance to defend himself in a denaturalization trial that may result in his internment for the duration and subsequent deportation.

Brought from Clinton Prison at Dannemora, N. Y., to stand civil trial with 19 other one-time bundsmen, Kuhn told Federal Judge John Bright:

"I want to let my cse rest in your honor's hands. I have had no legal advice and there is no testimony I want to give. For my family's sake, I would like to avoid publicity."

Judge Bright said it was all right for Kuhn to remain away from the trial, but said that if he offered no defense, the Government application to revoke his citizenship "probably will be granted if the Government presents a case that will justify it."

Kuhn said he understood, added that he was not in condition to stand trial after spending three years in prison, and departed—in custody.

He and the others are accused, as bund members, of having mental reservations concerning the loyalty they would show toward this country when they became citizens.

The first Government witness, designated John Doe to protect relatives in Germany, described workings of Nazi organizations here and told of meetings at which Hitler was cheered and saluted, Nazi fashion, while Nazi and old imperial flags graced the walls alongside the Stars and Stripes.

As he talked, the witness, a toolmaker born in Germany, trambled.

Kuhn, once called "just a common thief" by former District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey, now New York Governor, was convicted in 1939 of grand larceny and forgery.

He was charged with stealing more than $14,000 of bund money. During his trial it was testified that the funds and romance were closely linked.

New Exposure Expected Today in Latest Nazi Agents Action

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

New exposures loom today with setting up of a special grand jury to carry on investigation of Nazi propaganda conspiracies in America.

In the last hours of its three-month term, the District grand jury day before yesterday indicted 30 men, 3 women and a New York paper for conspiring with a German propaganda official to cause mutiny and disloyalty in the United States armed forces. The grand jurors were scheduled to retire, giving place to a new panel which will be chosen today.

Extension Necessary

Special Prosecutor William Power Maloney, however, asked Justice Matthew F. McGuire to authorize the jury to continue its work.

The extension was necessary, Maloney said significantly, "to complete investigations begun but not finished."

"In connection with thismatter?" asked Justice McGuire, holding up the 45-page seditious conspiracy indictment which had just been handed him by Grand Jury Foreman Harry Boss.

"Yes, your honor," Maloney replied.

Foreman Boss seconded Maloney's application. Justice McGuire said he was reluctant to require the jurors to go on serving, but granted a 30-day extension.

The grand jurors will be limited to the Nazi propaganda investigations which produced the indictment Monday.

Before proceeding to try the 34 alleged conspirators, the Department of Justice evidently hopes to clean up other matters which came up during the inquiry. Miss Jean R. Meyer, special prosecutor, indicated that an early trial will be sought for Mrs. Myrtle L. Flowers, secretary of the alleged conspirator, Gerald B. Winrod.

Accused of Perjury

Mrs. Flowers was accused of perjury a few weeks ago, the indictment declaring she testified falsely about "stacks" of $100 bills received by Winrod from Canada. Her counsel, former Assistant District Attorney John W. Wilson, will go before Justice Jesse C. Adkins today, to ask for the right to inspect the grand jury minutes on her case.

Meantime, Special Prosecutor John T. M. Reddan this morning will oppose the writ of habeas corpus sought by Edward James Smythe, who is in the District Jail for lack of a $2000 bond. Smythe was indicted for seditious conspiracy last July and was a fugitive more than thee months before he was caught. He was one of the 34 accused in the new indictment returned Monday.

Hedy Lamarr Sues Boss for $500 Raise

Los Angeles, Jan. 5 (AP).—Hedy Lamarr today filed suit against Loews, Inc., for interpretation of her contract, charging she failed to receive a $500 weekly raise last September 30.

The film actress said her contract called for $2000 weekly but her employer gave her only $1500, explaining the Federal Government's salary limit ruling gave it the right to pay her only that much each week, plus any additional sum needed to bring her income up to the $25,000 net for 1943.

Her suit maintains the company should continue paying her the full salary called for by the contract and leave it up to her to pay the Government all she receives over $25,000 net at the end of this year.

Murray Protests Surplus Tires Sums

Senator Murray (Democrat) of Montana announced yesterday that he had protested to John D. Goodloe, executive vice president of the Defense Supplies Corp., against some of the amounts paid for turned-in surplus tires.

"In one instance a farmer who surrendered his spare truck tire was paid 20 cents and he claims the tire was good for 8000 or more miles. This is a grave injustice and it is my hope that it will be immediately rectified. We cannot ask our citizens to sacrifice their tires and then have them cheated in the payments made for such tires."

Meal Planning in Wartime

We're making readjustments everywhere these days. Meals are likely to be a bit topsy-turvy with eggs, for example, going over to the dinner menu, and being replaced at breakfast with whole grain cereals. But even if foods have to be shifted around, our meals shouldn't . . . mustn't be lopsided or out of balance.

Nutrition's the Thing

The pace we've set for ourselves on the home front makes it doubly important that we get our full quota of health and energy-giving vitamins, minerals, proteins and other food essentials. It takes a bit of maneuvering so precious vitamins are not sacrificed.

That's where a simple, working knowledge of nutrition pays dividends. If you have more than a flavor acquaintance with foods . . . if you know what each contributes to the well being of the family, then it is a simple matter of nutritional calculation to know what replacements to make on the menu.

For instance, if you've used your quota of meat for the time, then you can build your menu around other protein-rich foods such as eggs, cheese, dried beans and peas, fish or fowl. Down through the menu you can go replacing those limited foods with more plentiful ones which contribute the same nutritional elements.

Avoid Monotony

As the variety of foods grows less, meals are likely to become a trifle on the tiresome side. Monotony discourages appetite, and poor appetite cuts down on efficiency. Get out of the cooking rut by serving those day-in-and-day-out foods a little different each time.

Try baking those eggs with cheese or chili sauce, or serve creamed, chopped hard-cooked eggs over steamed rice. A dash of paprika, a few drops of meat sauce, that ever-faithful onion or an iota of spice work wonderful changes in an ordinary dish.

Macaroni and cheese can be varied no end by adding sauteed chopped onion, celery or green pepper or by pointing up the flavor with tomato or chili sauce, a sprinkling of sage or garlic salt.

Two A Day

What, if anything, is going to be done about checking traffic fatalities remains to be seen. But the prospect as we enter 1943 is not promising. In the first three days of the year no fewer than six persons were killed on streets in the metropolitan area. This two-a-day rate almost certainly will not be maintained. Yet it implies a sizable increase of traffic deaths in 1943 over last year's appalling total of 108. As matters stand we cannot, in fact, expect anything but an increase.

Accident prevention authorities are proceeding with a traffic education program that would be a great help, if enough people would take enough account of its recommendations. The truth is, however, that these recommendations will probably make little impression on the public. One reason, perhaps, is that you cannot instill eternal vigilance in traffic merely by recommendation. The record of the past bears this out. Nor can you guarantee traffic safety by loading the public down with a battery of prohibitions—though a stricter enforcement of the rule against crossing at will in downtown streets is definitely in order.

What is really needed, however, is greater willingness to abide both by recommendations already made by traffic authorities and by regulations of traffic law. This would at least insure a reduction of accidents due solely to negligence on the part of pedestrians and drivers. But it is something to which the public has not yet brought itself and, in the circumstances, the consequence will inevitably be more and still more sudden death on local streets.

Reciprocal Aid

When Senator Butler of Nebraska said the other day that he dreaded to think of what was hidden behind lend-lease, he implied, ostensibly, that we are sending to the United Nations a great deal of foodstuffs and materials that do not appear in the record. This, as we have already explained, is a wrong assumption. The record is reported regularly to Congress under the terms of the Lend-Lease Act. It is always available to inquirers. What, however, is not accessible is the amount of reciprocal lend-lease which this country gets from its Allies. If this information were revealed, not only Senator Butler would be surprised but the country as a whole as well.

For instance, this newspaper was corrected only the other day in assuming, on the basis of a news story, that our boys in Australia have to be supplied from home. It appears that the War Department has been relieved of a goodly part of this supply problem by the Australian government. To some extent the credit which is thus built up in Australia goes to counterbalance the lend-lease consignments which go to Australia. In the same way an active reciprocal lend-lease account has long been in operation in Britain. Not much about it is known. Indeed, James B. Reston, of the New York Times, was so moved by the general ignorance on this and cognate questions of reciprocity in our war relations that some months ago he wrote a book about such matters.

The book is titled Prelude to Victory. Mr. Reston asked: "How many people in this country know today, for example, that just as we rushed guns to Britain at the time of the collapse of France, the British rushed antiaircraft guns to Panama to help in the defense of the canal right after the disaster at Pearl Harbor? How many know that when the Germans were sinking our ships right and left off the East Coast, we sent an S O S to the British for help in dealing with the U-boats, and got it right away? How many know that British fighter planes have been operating out of Cuba in an attempt to guard our shipping lanes?"

Mr. Reston gave an impressive list of aids to our warmaking which helped this country enormously in filling in the holes of our preparedness. But the list was by no means complete. A catalogue of aid in services arising out of Britain's combat experience could be compiled. To take one instance, there is the famed radio-locator, which had been used so effectively in Britain against the German night bomber. This was so secret that the British daren't turn it over even to the Russians in case it fell into German hands as a result of capture in battle. It is difficult to put a price on this type of aid, since there is no market valuation, as there is, say, for American dairy products to the Allies.

But, then, it is difficult to put a price on the aid of a less tangible kind than the gadgets we have been using of Allied origin. We refer to such assistance as the Russians have been affording in preventing the Nazi machine from rolling across the European-Asian divide. The men who held Stalingrad, the million and a quarter Russians who died of famine in Leningrad, the generalship of Montgomery, the cooperation of the Chinese—all this is beyond financial calculation. These are some of the services that have cut short our war by years. If lend-lease helped our Allies to turn the tide, that in itself was payment enough. The evidence is that it did. And in so doing the lend-lease idea was an act of what Mr. Dean Acheson has called "creative statesmanship" which is outstanding in world history. Some historian of the future, indeed, may say that it saved the world.

Small Business

Assurance by Mr. Nelson that this year small business plants may be assured of a billion dollars in war contracts is a fine gesture. But between pledge and performance there are obstacles which have hitherto bedeviled the task of giving the little man a share of war business. Experience is lacking. Deliveries are uncertain. Timing is difficult. Transport is awkward. All these factors must be taken into account in distributing the orders which stem from our war production program. Most of our weapons of war are the union of parts which have to be made separately and then sent to a central plant for assembly. A shell, for instance, may be the product of about a dozen different plants miles apart. Suppose that fuses did not arrive on time. Then the entire shellmaking program would be held up, and the expeditious work of manufacturers of the constituent parts other than fuses would count for nothing.

Doubtless this is the reason that so much of our war production has been concentrated. The procurement agencies naturally prefer to deal with factories with which they have hitherto been in relation. Of course, many new factories have had to be enlisted in the war effort. But here again the preference must inevitably be given to those plants which have the engineering skill making for adaptability to arms production. And these are generally sizable concerns. This has made things difficult for the little fellow. Not only is he hard put to it to get war orders; he is being squeezed out of peacetime business as a result of the shutdown in manufactures customarily used in the peacetime market. Either his line has been withdrawn or he cannot get the raw materials to work with. His plight was voiced in the last Congress and doubtless will be taken up in the new Congress.

Small business, which still remains the backbone of this land of big business, is difficult to define. Perhaps as good a definition as any is that small business is any enterprise that is not adequately represented in Washington. Thus when Congress set up a Smaller War Plants Committee last June 6, it had two objects in mind. One was to see that small business was represented in Washington; the other was to contribute to the utilization of the skilled labor and machine tools which are available in the hinterland. A capital of 150 million dollars was furnished. It was to be used for assisting those small manufacturers who could produce war supplies to obtain Government contracts. This was in addition to the aid continuously furnished by the Federal Reserve System in cooperation with its member banks in the provision of working capital for small business. However, by December 15 only two million dollars out of the 150 million dollars had been used, though the SWPC had been instrumental in distributing 104 million dollars in war contracts. The result is that the SWPC has been roundly criticized in both House and Senate for its alleged laggardliness. The House Small Business Committee put the responsibility at the door of the management of the corporation under Lou E. Holland.

Mr. Nelson has not been influenced by this criticism to the extent of making basic changes in personnel. Mr. Holland will remain as chairman of SWPC. In what way the program will be accelerated to make sure that small business gets a billion dollars in contracts is not explained in the statement from Mr. Nelson. In all likelihood it could be done by the procurement agencies giving prime contracts to the SWPC for distribution to small business concerns. There must be countless items of a stock or replacement nature in the delivery of which there is no deadline. If small business could be set to work on such items, and given engineering assistance, some at least of the difficulties would be solved without any danger to the scheduling of the war production program proper. Clearly we can never say that our resources have been fully utilized till the SWPC makes a better showing.

Much In A Name

Official recognition by the Army and Navy of the popular names for military aircraft should help end a lot of confusion about the identity of planes. Hitherto both the popular names and code letters and numbers—i. e. Flying Fortress (B-17)—have often been used interchangeably. As a result the public has frequently had to stop and figure out just what planes were involved in operations. The difficulty has been a handicap in getting a clear picture of those operations. This was to be expected, considering that the services use several score plane models, each with its own code designation. Approval of the use of popular names, such as the Liberator, Mitchell, Helldiver, Airacobra and so on, presumably means that from now on we can concentrate on learning these names, and need not bother about code symbols as well. It is a desirable simplification, and one which has long been in effect in Britain.

The use of popular names for weapons is, of course, as old as the art of war itself. And it applies today to almost every conceivable type of weapon. Not only are there names to designate types of weapons—for example, General Grant and General Sherman tanks, tank-killers (heavy guns mounted on tank chassis), ash cans (depth charges), and the like. There are also names for the individual weapons themselves. Thus plane crews have their own sobriquets for their craft, and so have tank crews. This, however, is usually a deeply personal matter, and something quite beyond the layman. Indeed, it could scarcely be otherwise, for planes and tanks—and ships and guns, for that matter—come to have personalities all their own, and quite rightly deserve appropriate identification by the men who man them. There is here something of trust, if not downright affection, on the part of man for his machine. As we have said, however, it is a private affair, so let us leave it at that.

South Pacific

It is evident from the latest reports of the fighting in the Solomons that the Japanese, in spite of the thorough trouncing they have received, are determined to cling to their shrinking foothold on Guadalcanal Island. In part that persistence can be explained in terms of the strategic significance of Guadalcanal. They know that in our possession it can—and will—serve as a springboard for a thrust in the direction of Rabaul and ultimately of Truk. In Japanese hands it could serve as the base for an offensive against the Australian-American life line and ultimately against Australia. Another reason that the Japanese have been coming back again and again to Guadalcanal may be psychological, i. e., their desire to regain lost "face."

But what is most inexplicable is that in making these attempts to dislodge our troops from the island, the enemy should now be operating on a shoestring. This does not make much sense. For it stands to reason that if the vast armada which the Japanese hurled against our position last September was insufficient to accomplish the desired objective, the dispatch of a small force could hardly do the job. Indeed, Secretary Knox has now revealed that the last effort was made by apparently eight destroyers, and that they failed to land any troops or supplies, having been driven off by our P. T. boats.

This action and others that have preceded it throw light on one aspect of the Japanese character which is not generally recognized. Despite much that has been said to the contrary, the Japanese are not given to reckless conduct. The very size of the naval forces they employed in such battles as Midway and the Solomons indicates that they sought to win by sheer weight of numbers alone. Having been beaten off, their native caution has got the better of them. Their policy in the Solomons since then has been one of eternal persistence rather than of calculated recklessness. And it is a policy which they have pursued not only in the fighting in the Solomons but also on New Guinea where the now-destroyed Japanese garrison was reinforced driblets at a time.

Caroline O'Day

Most feminists are somewhat masculine, but Caroline O'Day was a feminist who was extremely feminine. She was persuaded to devote herself to the cause of underprivileged women in 1916 when she was left a widow with three children. Never, however, was she an "equal rights" exponent. Once she declared that women could not be "biologically man's equal—suited to equally hard and exhausting labor," and that "forcing such an issue was a waste of time." Her femininity was the delight of the House. Her well-groomed appearance, her beautiful speaking voice, her sense of humor, and her engaging manner—they all captivated Congress. On the Hill they called her "the lady of the fans." Her hobby was collecting them, and her pleasure was to carry one, even on the floor of Congress. As with many other gentlewomen who engage in public affairs, she was a pacifist. Yet, though she voted against the draft, she was practical enough to help put through defense appropriations. And she died the mother of an Army officer. She will be missed by many who knew her as a firm friend, a cultivated companion, and a conscientious public servant.

THE SOWERS

My heart is full of a great love for these,
The strong-armed sowers. Now the grain is deep,
Sturdy, full-eared, breaking in waves like seas,
But those who sowed are not at hand to reap.

Splendid they were; vital, and young, and free!
Under their steel the loamy furrows bled
Color and promise for the years to be,
But while the harvest ripens, they are dead.

Their voices were strong music, like a prayer;
Laughingly brave they were, and fiercely true,
Breaking the stubborn earth beneath the share
For seed of holier harvests than they knew.

The tall grain stands, this beauty of their sowing;
The ripe core fattens in the kernels rough,
But they are gone who set the young blades growing.
I cannot honor them with love enough.

Postwar Plans

By Mark Sullivan

Senate Must Ratify

THE VOLUME of talk about peace—and plans for a postwar world—is forehanded. If the forehandedness is to be complete, it should include something understood little by foreigners and not wholly by our own people. This is, that no peace treaty, and no arrangement for postwar, can be valid until after it is ratified by two-thirds of the United States Senate—that is, by at least 64 out of the 96 Senators.

Failure of the world to understand this accounted in part for the failure of President Wilson, after the Great War, to bring about the kind of world organization he desired, the League of Nations. And that condition—the high hopes held out, the dreams inspired in masses of peoples, followed by disillusionment—was the cause of as much grief and bitterness as has ever followed from a single cause. Repetition of it now may be avoided if the world is made as fully aware of the function of the United States Senate, as it is of the projects now being given out.

IN THE GREAT War, after the fighting ended with a truce, Wilson went to Paris for a peace conference. There, with the statesmen of the other Allies, he set about a purpose which included two things. One was the ordinary business of a peace conference, to write a treaty, bringing the war to a formal end. The other purpose was to set up a permanent postwar world organization, the League of Nations, embodied in a document Wilson called the "Covenant."

After Wilson had been engaged in this at Paris for some three months, 39 members of the United States Senate united in a public round robin, calling attention to the fact that nothing Wilson did would be valid if it were opposed by more than one-third of the Senate—and 39 was materially more than a third. This impressed the statesmen with whom Wilson was dealing at Paris. While they were probably familiar with the function of the Senate, according to the American Constitution, they had rather taken it for granted that whatever Wilson did at Paris would be ratified at Washington. Among other effects, the Senate round robin diminished Wilson's influence at Paris, gave strength to his adversaries. Upon the world generally, not familiar with the American Constitution, the Senate round robin had an effect of stunned surprise.

WILSON UNDERTOOK to checkmate the Senate by a device of tying into the document the Peace Treaty and the Covenant of the League of Nations. He knew the Senate, reflecting popular sentiment, would be eager to get a peace treaty effected, so that our soldiers might come home, and the war be otherwise liquidated. Relying upon this, Wilson said:

"When that treaty comes back, gentlemen [in the Senate] will find the Covenant not only in it, but so many threads of the Treaty tied to the Covenant that you cannot dissect the Covenant from the Treaty without destroying the whole vital structure."

This defiance by Wilson strengthened the Senators in their determination. Congress undertook to bring the state of war technically to an end by a simple joint resolution. Wilson vetoed it as a disgrace to American honor. There followed tragic events, not necessary to recite here.

IN THE PRESENT case, we shall have not two things but three. There will be first a peace treaty in the ordinary sense, bringing the war to an end. This the Senate will be eager to ratify. There will be, second, some kind of proposal for the preservation of peace, whether like the League of Nations or something else. This the Senate will probably be willing to ratify—we have learned much since the League of Nations failed. But there will be, apparently, according to proposals coming from some sources, a third thing—an arrangement having to do with the economic organization of the world. This, the Senate will scrutinize carefully.

The thing for the world to bear in mind is that no international agreement, in any of the three categories, can become effective unless it is so satisfactory to so large a proportion of the American people that the Senate, reflecting the people, will ratify it by at least a two-thirds majority.

Defensive Warfare

By Paul Schubert

Our Enemies Fight Back

FOR WEEKS MacArthur's Aussies and Yanks have hammered at Buna, battering their way to a victory. As one Army man put it, they have been taking the position, "Jap by Jap."

SCHUBERT

The enemy, on the defensive, didn't give up the position easily or willingly. He tried, vainly, to bring in reinforcements. He found himself seriously handicapped by marked American-Australian air superiority. We used air power to attack his line of supply, to blast at his reserve dumps—to go all the way to Lae and Rabaul to attack his supporting bases.

Probably the Japanese knew many days ago, perhaps weeks ago, that Buna was doomed. At that point they wrote this position off as an element of their immediate strategic plans — in fact, the immediate loss of the Buna position may have had considerable weight in shaping the Japanese strategy at home.

But though Buna was written off, it was not given up. Before this position fell, it had one last job to do, and that was to make us pay in full measure—in time, material and men—for the conquest.

THE AMOUNT of payment exacted in a defensive stand of this nature is the test of the soldierly quality of the defenders. The commander at Buna might have surrendered as soon as he knew he was doomed to ultimate defeat. That would have been "humane" — but it would have presented us with an amount of unused United Nations offensive power measured by the number of troops and weapons in our Papuan attacking party, times the number of days it has actually taken us to beat the enemy down by bullet and bayonet.

The perfect defense, in a case of this kind, is one which fights to the death, or to the impotence of exhaustion.

As to the gains won by such a defensive stand, the most precious is usually time. The stand made by American forces at Bataan and Corregidor delayed the flow of the Japanese tide through the East Indies long enough for us to make a start at the garrisoning of Australia. The very fact that MacArthur has now enough strength to win at Buna is a reward for MacArthur's earlier defense of the Philippines—for if we had capitulated as soon as we realized that the Philippines were doomed, we should probably have presented the enemy not only with the Philippines but with Australia as well.

Buna is not the only defense now being made by Axis forces. In Russia there are a dozen German defenses under way — Rzhev and Stalingrad are particularly important.

In North Africa Rommel has been fighting a series of defensive rear-guard actions to cover his long retreat from Egypt to Tripolitania. His is not a last ditch position as yet, and so he has made no final stand. But more than once he has turned as if to stand, forcing his pursuers to stop and deploy for assault—to bring up artillery and offensive armor and spread out in a "front." . . . Then, at a well-timed moment, "the Fox" has slipped and run again.

In Tunisia, too, the enemy is on the defensive, intent upon forcing us to pay a maximum price for every square foot of ground gained.

The thing worthy of note about the behavior of our various opponents in all these defensive actions, is that they are fighting with skill and resolution.

In Russia, for example, the Germans were apparently taken by surprise as the Russian winter offensive proved both heavier and more effective than anyone anticipated. One false move, one moment of panic, might have led to a general collapse of the German position in Russia, with unforeseeable effects upon the morale of the home population. But despite heavy losses and despite the peril of besiegement, the Axis garrisons in Russia are fighting it out—the Russians themselves say that at Valikie Luki the defenders held to the last man, and had to be exterminated.

Stubborn defense like this not only wins time for the nation on the defensive—all of us of the United Nations have learned this lesson well during the past three years. It may do more. It may sometimes cause the attackers to throw in greater strength than they had anticipated—it may involve them far more heavily than they wish. That is probably what happened to Hitler in Russia in 1942, when Russia's stubborn resistance forced the Nazi Fuehrer to commit a greater percentage of the German fighting power than may prove either wise or safe. The German commitment in Russia is one factor that has opened the door to our "second front" plans in western Europe.

BUT, by the same token, if the enemy now manages to make Tunisia - Tripolitania a major front, he may get us over-heavily involved in North Africa and keep the war away from western Europe during 1943.

And if the Japanese keep our Pacific area offensive power occupied at places like Buna and Guadalcanal, they may manage to divert our blows from other spots where blows would hurt Japan more. They may also gain time to prepare new offensive movements of their own, aimed in new and embarrassing directions.

Defensive warfare does not necessarily mean "defeat." Our "victories" at Buna, El Alamein and Kotelnikov will be worth shouting about if they lead to the annihilation of the enemy's main forces and the enemy's ultimate capitulation. But to do that will probably require offensive action on a scale much grander than anything we are now showing.

Coal Waste

Just walk along any Washington street and observe the windows in large apartment houses and offices wide open in the coldest weather. Open because the heat in these buildings is so intense as to be unbearable. I have visited friends in apartments who complain they have to sleep uncovered because of the great heat. Managers in these buildings excuse this waste of precious fuel on the ground that the heat must be kept very high to satisfy the demands of a few particular people who demand temperatures from 85 to 90 degrees, and managers would rather waste coal than argue with tenants, rent boards, courts, etc.

This is a terrific travesty on justice and fair play. In a democracy, maximum temperatures should be fixed for all people no matter what fuel they use. The manpower and freight saved by not wasting coal would go a long way towards relieving the fuel oil shortage.

Peace Permanency

We will not have a lasting peace no matter what kind of pact or league we form and no matter how many nations join it. Why? In the first place, peace does not come by force. Real peace comes as the result of righteousness, right living and right doing, and not by one person attempting to force another to behave the way he wants him to. There is one important fact to take into consideraion.

There is a God in heaven who knows the end from the beginning and He has told us in simple language all about it. I recommend to all these peacemakers to read the second chapter of the Book of Daniel, especially the thirty-third verse, and maybe they would not have so much faith in a peace of their own making. They will have to find a man who can weld iron with clay before they can maintain lasting peace.

Girl Slackers

One can hardly pick up a magazine or newspaper nowadays without running smack into a "boo-hoo" story of Washington. How poor Lizzie Lish traveled all the way from Timbuctoo to our Capital to find herself miserable and inconvenienced no end. How, after a few months in the horrible city, Josephine Fink madly taxied to Union Station after sending a tearful wire to "Mamma" saying she couldn't possibly stand it any longer.

When a man makes an attempt to dodge his responsibilities, he is immediately dubbed a "slacker." Is there any reason why these girls and women of whom I speak shouldn't be called the same? How can they ever hear the words "war effort" without dropping their heads in shame?

Debts Forgiven?

Is it true, as rumored, that all retail store business in the United States is to be put on a pay-as-you-go basis in 1943, and that all unpaid debts for 1942 purchases are to be forgiven?

While such a "fiscal reform" would deprive shopkeepers of hundreds of millions of expected income, it would be a boon to millions of Americans, especially those in the armed forces, whose income has been cut by the war. If we could all forget our 1942 debts for merchandise (as well as for income taxes due the Government) and start the new year on a pay-as-you-go basis, what a grand and glorious feeling it would give us all! The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Point Ration System

Q. I am in the dark concerning the details of the new point ration system.

A. Who isn't?

Q. Do I start even with my grocer or do I get more points than he does?

A. Nobody ever starts even with a grocer.

Q. How many points constitute game?

A. You're confusing this with bridge.

Q. Is there a difference?

A. Yes. In bridge you get something to eat without asking.

* * * *

Q. As I understand it different foods take a different number of points. Suppose I can't add very well, can I leave it to my grocer?

A. You can always leave it to your grocer to add. But never expect him to subtract.

* * * *

Q. I understand the new book will have coupons in colors. Does this mean technicolor?

A. No; that will come later. For the present, the colors will be red and blue.

Q. Suppose a customer is color blind?

A. It will always be a good idea to pick a grocer who is not.

* * * *

Q. Would you mind giving me an example of how a customer will use the new point ration book?

A. Let us say you are in a grocery store; well, you think it would be nice to have some lamb chops, some canned fruit cocktails, some canned turtle soup and maybe some canned corn and peas.

Q. I don't care for canned peas. A. For the purpose of this illustration you will take canned peas and like 'em.

* * * *

Q. So what? A. You find you are running a little low on points in your book and you scratch the chops because they take 18. The fruit cocktails take 4 points. Canned soup is so scarce that a can takes 9 points. That means you're behind 31 points already in the first period.

Q. That leaves me with nothing but canned corn. Well, I like canned corn, so I will make a meal of it. Yes?

A. No. The dealer is all out of canned corn. This brings you down to the canned peas. The dealer has lots of canned peas.

Q. Must I have all the bad luck?

* * * *

A. Don't complain. If you aren't satisfied with the ration system you can get a gun and go hunting for rabbits.

Q. How many points will it take to get a gun?

A. You think of the darndest questions.

Not rapping the Democratic processes by any chance, are you?

Theaters, dance halls and cafes will be at the bottom of the list on fuel oil priorities. Heat in a theater, we have long considered, absurd. The minute an act is over everybody rushes outdoors to stand hatless and (unless its sable) coatless in a draft.

Heating a dance hall becomes less and less essential each year as the new dances develop. And as for the bars, anybody with the fortitude to stand the prices can stand any temperature.

For Lasting Peace

Surely the Allies will not again make the mistake made in World War I. I was in Camp Lee, Va., when the Armistice was signed and remained until our "overseas" soldiers were demobilized. The slogan, "On to Berlin," was dropped and Germany practically left intact.

If we want the war now being fought to be a lasting lesson to our enemies, two things are necessary for us to do. First, to invade the seat of their government. Second, to see that every foot of ground that they have taken be returned to those from whom they took it. W. J. HUBBARD.

Washington, Jan. 1.

Promote Worthy Clerks

Winning this war requires a volume of routine work and the one who does it well strengthens the dike to keep back the enemy. The strain of such work is backbreaking and in the Government it falls on the clerks assigned to the lower grades. To encourage them and to build up morale, I suggest that the supervisors of these clerks be chosen from their ranks and be the ones who "make the best mousetraps" in their particular assignments.

House Out Of Order

Too Many Federal Employes

THE NATIONAL Federation of Federal Employes during the more than 25 years of its existence has confined its activities strictly to the field of public personnel.

We have not, by word or deed, ever undertaken to shape general Government policies. But we have insisted always that where the fulfillment of those policies entails the employment of civilians, the conditions of employment shall be modern, fair and at least equal to conditions found in progressive private employment.

Our guiding principle has been in the conviction that sound methods of personnel administration in the Federal service benefit the public and the Government even more than they do the employes themselves.

Present conditions of personnel administration in many branches of the Federal service are such that we cannot patriotically remain silent any longer.

The paramount interest of the National Federation of Federal Employes, its officers and its members in every Federal agency everywhere under the flag is the speedy winning of this war.

Our continuing interest now, as always, is in the welfare of civilian Federal employes—not the transients who strut briefly across the stage in high position, not the ill-equipped or substandard who are projected onto the rolls in time of manpower shortage, but those who look upon the Federal service as a career and who, in season and out, and frequently under the most discouraging conditions, continue to give efficient service.

There are certain conditions in the Federal service today which cannot be ignored.

Common Sense Ignored

Too many recently arrived officials who wield extensive authority mistake opinionated ignorance for administrative acumen in dealing with the most vital of personnel problems. They are prone to substitute long-windedness for lucidity. They appear to regard publicity as an end in itself and not a means. Endlessly they speak of "streamlining" something, overlooking, in their search for a new smart phrase, that simplicity and commonsense are the best descriptive terms which can be applied to a properly managed public service.

The National Federation of Federal Employes declares unequivocally that there are too many Federal employes. There can be no blinking that fact.

But this is not the fault of the employes themselves. It is unmistakably the fault of those who have the power but not the experience, nor necessarily the capacity, for planning and administering governmental enterprises. They adopt the easy and invariable way of the untrained and unfitted, by ordering large numbers of employes, excessive amounts of floor space and equipment.

This makes for an imposing show—and for multiplied confusion.

Public resentment is rising steadily against administrative inepitude in certain branches of the Federal establishment. Unless it is checked by prompt and effective remedial action, this resentment will become a tidal wave.

A tidal wave is not discriminating, and if permitted to reach full flood the results will be disastrous.

The National Federation of Federal Employes foresees clearly—and knows by long and bitter experience—that a tidal wave of public revulsion never stops at scientifically demarked limits.

Such a crescendo of public feeling would, in all probability, take along with it all of the vitally important and constructive gains made so painstakingly in the field of public personnel administration over a long period of years.

The whole basic structure of the Federal civil service system, which in itself is sound and has been remarkably broadened and improved during the past 10 years, largely through the interest of President Roosevelt, very definitely is being jeopardized by the antics of administrative incompetents whose demands for more and more employes are insatiable.

That the President is not unmindful of the full implications of the situation which has arisen is clearly indicated by his forceful statement issued when he signed S. J. R. 170, the stop-gap overtime measure. The next step, the essential step, however, must be the implementing of that statement on down the line.

The situation demands positive action. It also demands constructive action to save the civil service from a violent public reaction which may destroy the progress of decades.

The National Federation of Federal Employes therefore makes the following specific recommendations:

Enactment of permanent legislation granting overtime payment on an equal basis to all employes. And wartime adjustment of pay in accordance with the generally recognized formula for private individuals. This is fundamental to all steps looking toward increased efficiency in the Federal service.

Under the recently enacted temporary overtime resolution, provision is made for justifying to the Budget Bureau the personnel complement of the various Federal departments and agencies. This is a step in the right direction. We must go further, however, and assist in every way possible the investigation to be conducted into Federal personnel matters by the House Civil Service Committee under the leadership of Chairman Robert Ramspeck.

Good citizenship, as well as enlightened self-interest, requires that the Federal civilian payroll undergo the closest possible scrutiny. The membership of the National Federation of Federal Employes need have no fear as to the outcome. As a body they always have believed in efficiency and have practiced it. If, as a result of impartial, temperate, discriminating study some dust is blown out of the Federal corners, it will not adversely affect these men and women who have been giving their best to the Federal Government and who have not looked upon the Federal service either as a playground or a plaything.

The Civil Service Commission, which has been doing a splendid job under adverse conditions, must be relieved of the compulsion of recruiting virtually limitless numbers of employes. Because too many appointing officers have been unrestrained in their demands for armies of employes, the commission necessarily is recruiting persons who by no stretch of the imagination can be held competent. There comes a time when it is better to let some work accumulate than to entrust it to incompetent hands.

Orders Not Clear

One of the most obvious, costly and harmful results of administrative incompetence is the issuance of voluminous and often unintelligible orders, a condition which appears to stem directly from that combination of pedagogy and a patronizing air which now hangs over certain Federal activities. This schoolroom odor (in its worst sense) could be dispelled by the apparently simple expedient of drafting orders which the average citizen can understand. Trained and capable Federal administrators have been doing just that for many years.

One simple test before the issuance of voluminous orders would have saved endless confusion and substantial amounts of Federal funds. Before sending these Brobdingnagian brain children forth some minor employe in the office should have been asked whether the order was understandable. If he or she could not grasp the import of the proposed order, it should be evident to any person attempting to deal with millions of human beings that the approach was fundamentally faulty.

The National Federation of Federal Employes is interested, first, last and all the time in securing for the people of this country the best and most efficient public service possible.

The membership of this organization knows what good government is. They are not only a part of good government, they are largely instrumental in creating it.

This war is making immense demands upon the Government. The problems of peacetime reconstruction will require ever more effective service from the various Federal departments and agencies.

The time to put the Government's administrative house in order is now—before it is too late.

To that end the National Federation of Federal Employes pledges its every energy, its every ability, and its every resource.

The Gallup Poll

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Wartime Jobs

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 5.—With the acuteness of the manpower problem being emphasized anew by Commissioner McNutt who declares that 65 million persons will be needed in full-time employment and the armed services by the end of the year, a majority of American voters are willing to see such drastic steps taken as may be necessary.

In a Nation-wide cross-section survey the majority vote in favor of giving the Government the right to tell workers where to work and at what jobs.

Such a program would be highly complex to administer and public sentiment on it is far from unanimous. One of the chief fears expressed by the voters is that compulsory manpower mobilization might not be fairly or equitably administered and would result in arbitrary rulings from Washington that might not fit personal or local circumstances.

Favored Since Last March

But the weight of opinion is clearly on the side of taking action if action is required; in fact, the man in the street has favored a compulsory manpower program in principle since March of last year.

Throughout the country this past week field reporters for the Institute have interviewed voters in every State on this question:

"Do you favor or oppose giving the Government the right to tell workers where to work and at what jobs?"

The vote is:

Favor	56%
Oppose	35
Undecided	9

A previous survey conducted in November, 1941, on a similar question showed 53 per cent in favor, 36 per cent opposed and 11 per cent undecided.

As early as last March the Institute found 82 per cent in favor of setting up a program whereby each adult not already in the armed services would register with the Government and appear before a local board, similar to local draft boards, to be interviewed concerning his experience, qualifications, skill, training and availability for work.

The majority likewise felt that, after examining each individual's case and taking cognizance of the problem involved, the Government should then have the right to assign workers to jobs wherever needed.

Typical Reactions

The typical reaction of the majority in today's survey is typified in the following report of a poll interviewer in Long Beach, Calif., who summarized his interviws as follows:

"Persons here whom I interviewed think the only way to win the war quickly is for every American to be ready and willing to go when and where his Government has need of him. A number feel that one man's job is just as important as any other. If the man who is called by his country for the armed forces must sacrifice his future success and comfort, so must any other loyal American do likewise. That's the attitude I found in my work here."

The voters who are opposed to the idea of giving the Government full control over workers complain that it would be undemocratic and too dictatorial. An interviewer in Houston, Tex., describes this attitude as follows:

"People interviewed here who are opposed felt it would be a stark violation of the freedom of American workers, undemocratic and out of the question."

Interviewers from farm areas report that considerable bitterness exists among farmers over the manpower shortage on farms. From Middletown, Del., for example, an interviewer reports:

"The farmers around here are, for the most part, pretty bitter. At present the labor shortage on farms around here is acute. Even for a daily wage of $5 or $6 labor cannot be obtained. The farmer is not in sympathy with the possible shortage of workers in war plants and thinks that his problem is equally serious. However, he questions the Government's ability or inclination to do anything about it."

Size Of The Army

By Ernest K. Lindley

A Basic Military Decision

WITH THE arrival of the new Congress, the demand for a reduction in the proposed size of the Army is almost certain to revive. Many localities are feeling a shortage of labor for the first time since the first World War. On the farms the shortage is acute. The further drafts on manpower for the armed services, now planned for 1943, will cause all kinds of dislocations in the production and distribution of goods, in personal services available for civilians, and in family lives.

LINDLEY

The size proposed for our armed forces is objected to or questioned also by officials of some of the civilian war agencies of the Government, by some of our Allies, or their friends, by the advocates of various specialized types of warfare, and by some naval opinion.

The Army is prepared to stand its ground, and so are the other armed services. The Army may be able to pare its estimated needs here and there; and some time after the middle of the year it will make revised estimates looking ahead to the end of 1944. These may be either higher or lower than the goal now fixed for 1943, depending upon the course of the war in all theaters.

BUT THE decision as to the numbers and types of American forces needed to assure victory is the responsibility of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, under the President. The schedule for 1943 has been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The Army's position is that anybody who assumes to insist that this schedule for induction and training shall be cut down is undertaking to overrule a basic military decision. The critic is saying, in effect, that the war must be won by forces smaller than the Joint Chiefs of Staff believe necessary, or by reliance on "trick methods."

The critic may be an enthusiast for a particular weapon or type of warfare: most likely air power. Aviation holds a major place in the Army's plans. The schedule provides that the Army Air Forces shall number 2,200,000 by the end of 1943. And at the present time, one of the most encouraging aspects of the war is the growing superiority of the United Nations in the air. This appears to be a superiority not only in numbers but in quality. In aerial combat over Tunisia, the Axis losses so far have been twice those of the R. A. F. and Army Air Forces. This is in spite of the fact that the Germans have thrown into this area some of their veteran pilots from the Russian fronts and Norway. In the South Pacific, the Japanese are losing from five to eight to our one, and their supply of experienced pilots seems to have run thin. They are also taking a shellacking in Burma and, on a smaller scale—because our air task force there is small—in China.

THIS ALLIED superiority in quality in the air, if maintained, may greatly affect the strategy and tactics of the war and substantially advance the day of victory. But it does not follow that the war can be won in the air alone, or even primarily. The Army is prudently preparing to defeat the German army on the ground. The arguments for using the manpower of our Allies are in many ways appealing. But it is difficult to get large quantities of equipment and supplies to the manpower of Russia, and even more difficult to get them into China. Besides, the Russians do not have a reservoir of manpower. They are producing the implements of war, as well as using them on the battlefront. Their main needs are for certain raw materials, special types of equipment, including planes, and probably some food. There is another reservoir of manpower in India, but for various practical reasons, it cannot be made a substitute for a highly trained, thoroughly equipped American army which can be sent to any theater of war or switched from one to another. The British are using their own manpower resources to full capacity.

The war might eventually be won by a more sparing use of American armed forces, but it might take several years longer. The purpose of the Joint Chiefs of Staff is to defeat both the Germans and the Japanese decisively as quickly as possible. American war production has now reached the point where it can equip an American Army, Navy and Air Forces of the sizes now contemplated and, within the limits of available shipping, still send supplies to our Allies. Even now equipment is going to North Africa for use by the French forces.

Some civilian officials fear, however, that our war production will fall short of its goals if the armed forces take the men they now plan to take in 1943. To many citizens in localities where the shortage of manpower is already being felt, this fear may seem well-grounded. On the other hand, it must be recognized that the use of our manpower has not been well organized. It has been largely unmanaged and mismanaged. One of the simplest methods of making our manpower go further—the general lengthening of the working week to at least 48 hours—has not been applied.

Manpower is being saved every day by approved methods and short cuts in production. More can be saved by a little extra effort on the part of every worker. And there are still many activities which can be dispensed with for the duration of the war. Until our manpower is more efficiently organized and used than it now is, the burden of proof lies with the critics of the decision made by the Joint Chiefs of Staff as to the size of the armed forces needed to guarantee victory.

17 Allied Countries Promise to Restore Rights Of Axis-Overrun Nations After War

Seventeen allied belligerent governments and the French National Committee served notice on the Axis and its beneficiaries yesterday that property rights in countries now occupied by them will be restored to their rightful owners when the Axis is ejected.

The French National Committee, State Department officials explained, is the fighting French national committee headed by Gen. Charles de Gaulle in London.

In a declaration made public by the State Department the signatories emphasized they had reference to all property rights or interests which have changed hands through enemy action "whether such transfers or dealings have taken the form of open looting or plunder or of transactions apparently legal in form." The declaration applies even to such transfers of property which "purport to be voluntarily effected," such as the disposal of homes, businesses or securities whose owners were terrorized into signing them away.

The declaration does not specifically mention properties previously owned by Jews in Germany or other countries and now held by non-Jews who took them over at panic prices when Jews were forced out of business or expelled. Officials emphasized, however, that it applies to "property, rights and interests of any description whatsoever" lost by individuals, corporations or governments through enemy action or manipulation.

State Department officials were asked specifically about property taken from Jews within Germany. They replied that the declaration applied to all property transfers in occupied countries whether of Jews or non-Jews; but that no deductions should be drawn as to its application inside Germany itself.

In effect it warns all persons in Axis-occupied countries that any property rights they may acquire under the protection of Axis occupation authorities or puppet governments will not be recognized when the Axis is expelled.

Carpenters' Council Postpones Banquet

The Carpenters' District Council of Washington, Alexandria and vicinity postponed for the duration the banquet it was planning for March 6 as "an all-out affair in the interest of organized labor," it was announced yesterday.

The affair, which was to have been the first large banquet at the Statler Hotel, was canceled to comply with the President's request that organizations forgo conventions and banquets during the war. The council, representing about 9000 carpenters in this area, said partial plans had been made for many labor leaders, Government officials and friends of labor to attend.

Baseball Season Set Back, Spring Travel Cut

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Jan. 5.—The elasticity of the sports world, in the matter of providing funds for charity, has never been more evident. During this month it will shoulder the job of raising dough for the annual fight against infantile paralysis, in addition to all the other tasks which it has willingly shouldered.

CONSIDINE

It pitched into the job of raising money for the Navy Relief Society, Army Emergency Relief Fund, Red Cross, USO, United Seamen's Service Fund and other war chests with vigor and generosity, but it isn't forgetting its contributions to a battle that has been going on night and day for years. The Nation-wide committee of sportswriters and sportscasters who work annually for this fund have rounded up a host of sports events in every conceivable realm of athletics—even rassling.

The connection between athletics and infantile paralysis work is a poignant one. The examples of persons whose lives have been saved by proper treatment for the disease are graphic. Many headliners in nearly every sport owe their lives and their health to the kind of treatment which the National Infantile Paralysis Foundation wants to bring to less fortunate children and adults. "Let's play, so others can walk," is the slogan which thousands of athletes, pro, semi-pro and amateur, can carry into events with them this month.

Mike Jacobs, who put the sports world solidly in charitable work for the duration when he promoted Joe Louis' fights against Buddy Baer and Abe Simon last year, will stage a big one—Henry Armstrong Baer and Abe Simon last year, will stage a good scrap in Madison Square Garden probably January 29 to raise funds for a battle which never knows an armistice or a furlough. Three other New York promoters, Bill Johnston, Marty Cohen and Mike Genovese will stage shows during the same week.

Fordham plays Columbia in basketball this Saturday for the benefit of the fund—one of hundreds of such games by collegians and high school players to be played throughout the country. The famed Ice Follies will be presented in Buffalo on January 30, the night of the President's birthday, for the benefit of the fund. The show's delightful comedian, Heinie Brock, who recovered from the crippling effects of infantile, will give a special performance that night.

Every other sport will chip in, thanks to appeals from sportswriters and sportscasters to their local promoters. Before the campaign is over, the sports world can well afford to take another deep bow. It will have one coming to it.

Champ Pickens, the veteran promoter who stages those fine North vs. South football games each year in Montgomery, Ala., writes in to point out that the Montgomery game should be listed among those post-season contests which provide funds for charity.

Started five years ago, the net receipts of the game have always gone to the Associated Charities of Montgomery, to which was added the USO this last time. The city bears some of the expense of promoting the game. The players this year received a jacket, a $25 war bond and a trip from Montgomery to the Sugar Bowl and return. Coaches Lynn Waldorf of Northwestern and Carl Snavely of Cornell have worked for nothing since the inception of the game.

If you think that ranking the football teams is an uncertain science, get yourself a load of the following college basketball ratings, all termed "official" by the solemn arranger, Dick Dunkel.

The first ten of the country, he says, are Oregon, 73.6; Southern California, 73.4; Duquesne, 73.2; Indiana, 72.8; De Paul, 72.2; West Virginia, 72.2; West Kentucky State, 72.0; New York U., 71.8; Notre Dame, 71.8, and Creighton, 71.2. Don't ask me about the decimal quotations. Mysteries like this are locked only in the brains of people who are compelled, by some fearful alchemy, to make up sports ratings. It would be interesting, however, to see N. Y. U. and Notre Dame play at this point, however, for presumably it would be the only tie in basketball history. We'd also like to see Oregon play Southern California and win, supposedly, by a score of 2/10's to 0.

Dunkel says the 10 best service teams are St. Mary Pre-Flight, Great Lakes, Camp Grant, Ill., Texas Pre-Flight, Olathe Flyers, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Peru (Ind.) Navy, New York Coast Guard, Norfolk Naval Training, and Selfridge Field.

Buttercup Makes Herself at Home but Marietta Park Just Isn't the Same Now

Marietta Park, D. C., Jan. 5.

Dear Boss:

I'm keeping a woman . . . at least, an old hen. The man called me up and asked me if I wanted her dressed or undressed. So I said never mind the clothes. In case you didn't look at The Post sports pages today, she arrived undressed and in a big coop. I'm afraid I'm not keeping her in the manner to which she's accustomed, but I believe I will do better if I can locate a book on how to raise chickens. In fact, I would settle right now for a book on how to raise ONE chicken. That's what I'm stuck with.

HAIGHT

I always said that no good would ever come out of radio, Boss, and now I know it. Yesterday when I was wobbling up Pennsylvania Avenue toward Post Square I wasn't giving chickens a thought despite the fact it was a windy day. This morning I find myself a combination of waiter, water boy and janitor to a hen.

It's all because we weren't listening to the right program when Jerry Strong phoned the other night from WINX. A consolation prize he called it, but darned if I knew a 2¼-pound chicken could upset the Haight way of living.

In the first place, I had to hustle her out of the Sports Department which, you'll have to admit is no place for a lady, now that Ann Hagner has been transferred to another department. I didn't give her a chance to hear even one off the beam moron story. About the only thing she picked up there was a name, Buttercup, which wasn't bad considering she is a Yellow Tag chicken.

Buttercup is a buxsom miss and, as a result, I found her to be a problem child even before I got out of the building. There wasn't room for three of us—the hen, the coop and me—to get in one section of the revolving door. So I had to leave the coop. (Might be an incentive to your reporters to leave the coop there, Boss. A good hint, anyway. You know you only have to put the letter "S" on the front and it's "scoop,")

I finally got her in the back of my car but, Boss, this Buttercup isn't any backseat driver. We hadn't gone a block before she flew right over into the front seat. The traffic policeman at Fourteenth and F blew his whistle and I thought sure he was going to yell "chicken thief."

We got up to Thomas Circle and had to stop for a red light. I'll admit, Boss, that I might have started on the yellow light. I looked around at Buttercup and darned if she wasn't shaking her head. She seemed to say, "Don't you think it would be a good thing to wait for the red?" Just like my wife, Boss. Maybe Buttercup had a near relative that was served in the chicken salad at my wife's bridge club.

Well, the family wasn't home when we arrived so I put her down the cellar. Friend wife was the first to get home.

"We have a visitor," I informed her, "She's down the cellar."

"Down the cellar?" she came back, "You don't have to tell me, I know that's one of your relatives."

So I had to explain about Buttercup.

I told you the chicken was changing the Haight way of living, Boss. I had to carry down the trash because the others weren't going down the cellar "with that wild chicken down there." So I brought Buttercup up and introduced her around.

After dinner our darling daughter spoke up, "Pop, how do you kill a chicken." I explained that the best way was to lay the chicken on a block and cut its head off and I added, "That's just what I'm going to do tomorrow morning."

Before we went to bed I tiptoed down the stairs (no wise cracks. I'll admit the stairs creaked). I expected to find Buttercup perched on the clothes line or on the top of my chiffarobe that was too big for our bedroom. I finally found Buttercup, Boss, and let me say right here and now she's no fool. She was backed right up to our oil-burner.

I carried the Buttercup problem right to bed with me.

My last conscious recollection was a debate as to whether it would be better to slice off her neck with a sharp kitchen knife or take a chance on our dull ax. Then I went to sleep.

I dreamed I was in the French

Divorce Suit Holds Future of DiMaggio

Star Yankee Slugger Expected to Quit Game If Wife Goes Through With Court Proceedings

By Jack Mahon

International News Service Sports Writer

New York, Jan. 5.—The baseball future of Joe DiMaggio, one of the greatest players of all time, probably will be decided by those ceaseless workers in the tangled affairs of men—the divorce mills of Reno.

"If Mrs. DiMaggio insists on going through with her divorce action against Joe I'd almost be willing to bet the boy quits the game and goes into the service, declared one of DiMaggio's closest friends and advisers tonight.

"I've talked to him several times since the breakup and know of what I speak," continued our informant, who prefers to remain anonymous. "The boy is terribly upset over his trouble and wants very much to effect a reconciliation. The fact he is back in Reno again to see Mrs. DiMaggio and the baby proves that.

Doesn't Care Much

"I talked to him long distance, only last week, and though he didn't mention quitting, at that time, made it very plain he wouldn't care much about anything if his wife divorced him."

Our source said DiMag had discussed enlisting in the service many times but was too upset by the breakup of his family to do anything about it. "If the divorce takes place I'm virtually certain Joe won't play ball this year. He doesn't even want to think about it now. He undoubtedly would enlist."

The possibility of Joe quitting the game in which he has earned a

Helen Jacobs Seeking WAVE Commission

By the Associated Press

Williamsburg, Va., Jan. 5.—Helen Jacobs, who has laid aside her famous tennis racket lately because the "war comes first," is going to Smith College January 16 for training as an officer candidate in the WAVES.

JACOBS

There was a wistful note in her voice when the former United States women's tennis champion spoke of "not having time for tennis," but there was a justifiable pride in her tone as she talked of becoming an officer candidate.

"I hope to get in public relations work," she said. "And I think the women's part in this war is wonderful."

G. W. High Beaten, 35-32, By Eastern

Holding a lead from the first whistle, Eastern's Ramblers evened the season's score with George Washington High yesterday at Lincoln Park when they copped a rough and tumble game by a 35-32 margin.

The Ramblers grabbed a four-point lead at the opening of the game and held the limelight until end of first quarter when a late G. W. basket made it 12-all.

In Eastern's curtin raiser with George Washington just three weeks ago, the little Presidents proved superior by 26-20, but profiting by the first loss, Coach Dallas Shirley drilled the Blue Tide into an all-hitting five and walked over the baffled Alexandrians.

Calvin Bailey, rangy forward, led the scoring for the Presidents with 15 points and was followed by teammate Joe Hensley, center, who claimed 13 markers. These two copped first and second place scoring honors for the game with only one other G. W. player scoring, Darcy Campbell, who put in

Sinkwich, Dove, Other Stars Given Trophies at Touchdown Banquet

By Bill Burnett

King Football took an impressive and final bow for the 1942-43 season, perhaps the war's duration, in Washington last night as upward of 800 rabid followers of the sport sat in on the seventh annual Touchdown Club banquet at the Willard Hotel.

It was award night as far as the Nation's and city's finest gridmen for the year were concerned, and old-timers turned out en masse to do them homage.

Featuring the affair was the appearance of Frankie Sinkwich, Georgia's teriffic back, to receive the Walter Camp Memorial Trophy as the Outstanding All-American player of 1942. The Knute Rockne Memorial Trophy for the outstanding All-American Linesman went to Bob Dove, Notre Dame end.

Bruce Smith Gets Trophy

Recognition of the country's best gridman in the armed forces came in the form of a trophy to Bruce Smith, Great Lakes Naval Training Station back from Minnesota. And the best players in the Washington area were honored when Tommy Mont of Maryland University was named outstanding collegiate player, Al Romasco, the best at George Washington; Bob Duffey, the best at Georgetown; Phil Funk, of Wilson High, the best public school player, and Ronnie Waldron, of Gonzaga, the best private school player.

In most cases war bonds replaced the huge metal trophies of former years.

Despite the galaxy of 1942 greats on hand, the show was stolen by Jimmy Conzelman, head coach of the Chicago Cardinals, who acted as principal speaker. A recognized raconteur, Conzelman kept his audience in an uproar for 45 minutes with his dry wit, at the American Five Wins, 58-43, Over Gallaudet

Sparked by Capt. George Zuras, American University's five led Gallaudet during the entire game last night and won, 58-43, in a Mason-Dixon contest on the home court.

The visitors threatened in the early moments, but faded back as Zuras scored a total of 28 points and Hossick and Fugler accounted for 11 and 10, respectively.

It was the Eagles' second conference victory against one loss. They have defeated Johns Hopkins and bowed to Catholic University. Galludet has yet to win in conference play.

Sport Hears Emergency Measures

Travel Limits Set As Leagues Meet With Landis; ODT Expresses Pleasure

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 5.—The major leagues, in emergency joint session with Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis, decided today to set back the opening of the 1943 baseball season eight days to April 21, but voted to continue the playing period one week, closing on October 3.

They also drew up a sharply defined area in which they may do their spring training, with the understanding each club would condition at home, or as close as possible, in the interest of curtailing rail travel mileage.

Teams, they decided, must train north of the Potomac and Ohio Rivers and east of the Mississippi, with the exception of the two St. Louis clubs which were given the option of using Missouri as a site. This decision ruled out as training bases the South Atlantic seaboard States and Hot Springs, Ark., mentioned as possible alternate sites after Florida and California earlier were listed as "out of bounds."

In Washington, Joseph B. Eastman, director of the Office of Defense Transportation, said he was "greatly pleased by the action which the major leagues have taken today to reduce their travel requirements for the coming season." His statement was released here by the Office of War Information.

Request Defined

Eastman said the only request he had made of baseball men was that they hold travel to the necessary minimum, but he added he had not specified what that minimum should be, because he did not "know enough about the baseball industry to pass judgment on that matter."

The meeting, hailed as baseball's most important since Landis quit the Federal bernch in 1921 to become commissioner after the 1919 World Series scandal, was delayed nearly two hours because representatives of several Eastern clubs were aboard trains late in arriving.

Landis personally announced results of the two-hour parley. He said the 154-game schedule would remain in effect, including three East-West trips, previously agreed upon. Since 1936 each club made the cross-country junket four times.

"Transportation during spring training will be held to a minimum," Landis said, "and after spring training there will be need for utmost cooperation on the part of the various clubs to cut man mileage as much as possible."

Clubs to Decide

He said the question of reduced personnel on road trips would be left up to the individual clubs.

The commissioner, who conferred last week in Washington with Joseph B. Eastman, director of the Office of Defense Transportation, presided over the meeting, which was attended by men from 15 of the 16 major league clubs.

The Washington Senators were the only team without a representative in the meeting, although Joe

St. John's Wins Rough Game From Anacostia

Fists Fly as Cadets Lead All Way to Win, 39-24; Fourth Straight

Both clubs played as though the city championship hinged on the outcome yesterday as St. John's High, seeking its fourth straight triumph, handed a 39-24 beating to Anacostia on the winner's court.

A fast first quarter settled the issue in the Johnnies' favor. They moved into a 6-0 lead before Anacostia scored, held a 13-6 advantage going into the second period, and were never seriously threatened. At the half they boasted a 20-9 edge and it was 27-15 as the final period started.

Play was rough throughout. A flare-up of fist swinging saw Paddy McCarthy, veteran guard, waved out of the Johnnie line-up in the first quarter and before it was over George Hughes had also retired on personal fouls. The Indians lost Elliott Day and Joe Caponiti in heavy action late in the game.

Hughes, the Cadets' stellar gridman, lasted long enough to take scoring honors. His 14 points, all on field goals, beat out teammates Chuck Dudley by three and Sleepy Thompson by four. Pete Kikta, a newcomer to the Indians, featured their scoring with 9 points though the floor leader was Center Nelson.

Though a total of 34 foul shots were allowed by Referee Bucky Buscher, only 11 were sunk. St. John's dropped 5 out of 15 and the Indians made good on only 6 out of 19.

Georgetown will take time out from its eastern and possibly national basketball championship dreams tonight for the little matter of the first of two city championship battles with George Washington University in the Tech High School gym.

Unbeaten in five starts, the Hoyas' star-studded court crew will face a rugged Colonial outfit which has an even break in four games to date, its defeats at the hands of two powerful service outfits.

With college basketball shunted to the cramped quarters of Tech High by the demands of the city's only major indoor stadiums and arenas, the game is expected to draw a capacity of 4100 persons tonight, a crowd reminiscent of the city's most famous court battles at Tech, Georgetown-N. Y. U. and George Washington-Long Island. Game time is 8:30 p. m. with a preliminary between two D. C. Recreation League teams as both the Hoyas and Colonials have abandoned freshman basketbell.

Hoyas Hold Edge

In the modern renewal of this intra-city series Georgetown holds a 4-3 edge and in the last six meetings the favorite has been beaten. The rivalry has yet to produce a one-sided game and last year the teams split even, George Washington winning, 45-36, and Georgetown taking its second meeting, 52-42, both before capacity houses of more than 5000 in Riverside Stadium.

Tonight's meeting is almost a version of East vs. Midwest basketball as the entire Hoya first team hails from Metropolitan New York while three George Washington first stringers are from the Midwest, John Konizewski from Pennsylvania and Joey Gallagher from this city, the only local product to start.

The game promises to be a meeting of Georgetown's flashy ball handling experts with scoring power, style, drive, spirit and height against the starless, powerhouse style of the Colonials who lack the individualism of the favored Hoyas, whose only drawback is the lack of experience. Only two seniors will be in the starting lineups, Konizewski and Gallagher of the Colonials.

Strangely enough a freshman, Georgetown's center, John Mahnken, a 6-foot-8 West New York, N. J., youngster will be the man to watch. The lanky 19-year old yearling does not depend on his height to make the team for he has court class. He controls the backboards, is a master of the follow-up and rebound and for his size, handles himself remarkably well. He has scored 88 points in five games to date.

At one forward spot the Hoyas have Andy Kostecka, a record breaker in point making in his Newark high school days and last year with the Hoya frosh. To date he has made 86 points and will be flanked by Danny Gabbianelli, only junior on the squad and a vastly improved ball player over last year. Tiny Iiggs Reilly, a 5-foot-6, is pressing Gabbianelli for the job.

At guards the Hoyas have Danny Kraus, who could play basketball 24 hours a day. The tireless youngster from New York is a hand-and-arm waving guard who never leaves the ball and has as a running mate Billy Hassett, brother of the Yankee first sacker, smoothest ball handler on the squad.

George Washington will counter with two Evansville (Ind.) juniors at fordward, Jim Myers and Jim

WINX Will Broadcast Hoya-Colonial Game

The Georgtown-George Washington University basketball game will be broadcast tonight at 8:30 over Station WINX from the McKinley Tech gymnasium. Sam Lawder will handle the mike for the play by play and Jerry Strong will be on hand with additional comment.

Young Curran Enters Mounted Coast Guard

Carroll Curran, 19-year-old son of Marrian Curran, sr., master of the Indian Spring Valley Hunt near Silver Spring, Md., has entered the mounted Coast Guard service and now is stationed at Killdevil Hill, N. C.

Carroll, who has been riding ponies and horses since he was 2½ years old, is regarded by local horsey experts as one of the best young riders in the game. Widely known in the show ring, he has won ribbons from New York to Virginia, and three years ago lasted through the finals of the horsemanship class at the National Horse Show in Madison Square Garden.

In the mounted Coast Guard as a third class specialist, Carroll is serving with several other prominent horsemen from this area—Chief Petty Officer Donald Bradley, James (Sing) Radney and Willie Davenport, who for many years rode race horses on Maryland tracks. All are serving along the North Carolina coast, the latter trio at Currituck Beach.

Carroll, a graduate of Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School in 1941, afterward was employed at Washington National Airport. He resigned that position in December to enter the Coast Guard, enlisting just before the "freezing" order went into effect.

His older brother, Marrian Curran, jr., is in the Army Air Forces and currently is stationed at Miami Beach, Fla. Curran, sr., hopes that both boys will be able to get leave from their respective posts in time for a gala hunt to be given at the family's Indian Spring Valley Farm in the heart of the Montgomery fox-chasing country.

Dear Al,

The Inaugural, ranking feature on Hialeah's opening-day program, January 13, has a value of $5000 added and is for horses of three and upward age at six furlongs. Weights for this stake will be posted on Monday, January 11. The fifteenth running of the Inaugural is expected to attract an excellent field. Starting possibilities at this time appear to include Doubirab, Bolingbroke, Bright Willie, Overdrawn, Joe Burger, Through Bound, Bright Gallant, Blue Pair, Dispose, Augury, Joe Ray, and No Wrinkles. The Hialeah Inaugural was scheduled as a stake in 1929 and won by Clean Play. Gun Royal scored in 1939; Angry in 1931, Flying Heels in 1932; Gold Step in 1933, Clarify in 1934; Roman Soldier in 1935; Whopper in 1936 and 1937; Clocks in 1938; Early Delivery in 1939; Maetall in 1940; Liberty Flight in 1941, and DeKalb in 1942. The time record for the stake which also is a track record was set up by Hal Price Headley's giant, Whopper, when he won for the second time in 1937. The big horse fairly sizzled over the six furlongs in 1:09 4/5, three-fifth of a second off the American record. Liberty Flight, racing for W. F. Mannagh, netted the largest purse, that of $5230. Clocks earned $5210 for L. E. Ogle. DeKalb's victory gave Hirschensohn $5130. Mrs. W. Plunket Stewart's Early Delivery earned $5070. The Hialeah Inaugural marks the beginning of a series of lucrative offerings which President John C. Clark has announced for the Miami Jockey Club meeting. The 11 stakes range in value from $5000 added to the $25,000 added Widenner, scheduled for renewal on the closing day of the winter session, March 6. Approximately $500,000 in purses will be distributed to horsemen during Hialeah's racing period. Runner-up feature to the Hialeah Inaugural on opening day will be "The Greater Miami" Purse for four-year-olds and up, seven furlongs out of the chute, purse $1200. Thanks to Joe Grossman of the Hialeah publicity staff.

A Golf Tip: Bet Craig Wood in Open

Blond Pro Star Says He's Cinch to Win If and When War Ends

By the Associated Press

Miami Beach, Fla., Jan. 5.—Blond Craig Wood shrugged off his 41 years, minimized a back operation which will keep him away from a golf course for eight months, and talked confidently today about winning the First National Open championship to be held when peace comes.

The fact that he has been in bed nearly a month because of a recurrent spinal ailment didn't dim his enthusiasm as he explained:

"If the war doesn't last too long, I don't see why I shouldn't win the Open again. There won't be any new contenders to worry about at first, and the old ones I defeated in 1941 aren't getting any better."

Wood is staying in bed now except for occasional trips to an osteopath so that he can get ready for a projected Nation-wide exhibition tour with Joe Kirkwood, sr., for war relief.

Once the tour is over, probably next October, he will undergo an operation for the removal of a vertebrae cushion which chronically slides out of place and forces the duration Open champion off his feet until treatments take effect.

His body will be encased in a cast for several months, and Wood said it would be about eight months before he can swing a golf club.

As soon as he can play again, he expects to regain his form without difficulty.

"I know I am 41 years old," the Mamaroneck, N. Y., professional asserted, "but I don't see any reason why I should slow up for some time yet.

"There are two things you have to do to keep playing good golf. You have to keep your incentive, and you have to be able to keep getting distance.

"While I'm older than most of the pros, I'm strong and I can hit 'em about as far as the next one. If you can't keep up from the tees, you're likely to lose your incentive when you see the other fellow with a short shot to the green while you must press."

Wood, who had to wait until he was 39 before he won his first Open title at Fort Worth in 1941, said his ambition now is to retain the championship when play is resumed.

Plans for the exhibition tour are not complete, but Wood and Kirkwood may get started in California late this month.

Navy Releases Revised Sport Schedules

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 5.—Navy athletic officials announced today cancellation of seven winter sports events and addition of four others to the long mid-year schedule.

Opening Saturday against Dickinson College, the Middy basketball quintet seemed the only one of seven mid-winter sports squads that might navigate its schedule without alteration.

The wrestling and fencing teams had to cancel twice because of transportation and problems imposed on opponents because of war-geared academic schedules.

The wrestlers gave up a January 16 date with West Virginia and a February 20 outing with Harvard. The fencers lost scheduled tilts with Rutgers, January 30, and New York University, March 20.

The swimming team's scheduled opener, next Monday, with Cornell was canceled. A tentative meet with North Carolina, January 30, was moved back until February 10.

The swimmers would have had another cancellation when Virginia called off a dual meet, January 23, but Temple has been substituted.

Numerous plebe contests were dropped because of transportation.

Additions to previously announced schedules also included a decision to send the gymnastic squad to the National Intercollegiate meet at State College, Pa., March 13, and scheduling of Penn State's fencers on February 6 and the Quantico Marines pistol team, January 30.

Dodgers to Lose Pitcher Casey To Coast Guard

By the Associated Press

Atlanta, Jan. 5.—Hugh Casey, hard luck guy of the 1941 World Series, said today he would report "the latter part of this week or the first of next week" for active duty with the U. S. Coast Guard.

"I am definitely not quitting the Dodgers," said the Georgia-born Brooklyn right-hander, indicating that he hopes to resume professional baseball after the war.

Casey gained his hard luck tag in the fourth game of the 1941 series, when Catcher Mickey Owen dropped the now famous third strike on Tommy Henrich of the Yankees, after Casey had won an apparent 4-3 decision in the ninth inning. The bobble put Henrich on first, and the Yankee sluggers turned on the heat to win the ball game, putting the Dodgers behind, 3 games to 1, instead of tied, 2 to 2.

Md. Yearlings Top Central Quint, 30-26

Maryland University freshmen basketers opened their season yesterday with a 30-26 victory over Central High at College Park.

Despite the high scoring of Central's Bob Walsh, the hosts led throughout after taking a narrow 10-8 lead in the first quarter. They could never build up a safe margin, but managed to keep just ahead of their young rivals.

Walsh, newest member of the Viking five, tossed in four field goals and as many foul shots for 12 points. Big Bob Hill, center, registered eight points to tie the Terps' best scorer, Frank Redinger.

Nebraska Whips Kansas State, 41-32

Manhattan, Kans., Jan. 5 (AP).—Nebraska University defeated Kansas State, 41 to 32, as the two teams opened the second wartime Big Six Conference basketball season tonight.

The Wildcats led 19 to 11 at halftime, and it was midway in the last half before the Huskers moved into the lead. Kansas State held Nebraska to three field goals in the first period.

Thompson, Husker guard who sank only a free throw in the first half, struck with deadly accuracy late in the game to ring up five goals and two free throws in the final period.

Fordham Disposes Of Holy Cross, 62-44

New York, Jan. 5 (INS).—Fordham University's basketball team tonight vanquished Holy Cross, 62 to 44, at the Fordham Gymnasium.

Fordham got away to an early 8-point lead, but the Crusaders came back to trail at the half by only 25 to 24.

Hockey Lions Face Bisons; May Get Help

A defenseman borrowed from the Buffalo Bisons is expected to make his debut in the line-up of the injury-riddled Washington Lions tonight when they entertain Cleveland's tough Barons in an American Hockey League match at Uline Arena, 8:30 o'clock.

General Manager Eddie Shore of the Bisons yesterday agreed to lend Washington a defenseman, but was not able at that time to disclose the identity of the player.

"We have several developments pending, but we are forced to borrow an extra man to round us out at this time," General Manager Lee J. Perrin of the Lions announced last night. "We therefore were only too glad to take whoever Buffalo offers with no questions asked."

Meanwhile, Tony Graboski, veteran defenseman of the Lions who was expected to return to Les Canadiens, is to hold over here due to the inability of the Canadiens to deliver Charley Phillips, the giant redhead expected to replace Graboski here, at this time.

The retention of Graboski last night reopened reports that the Lions may trade Graboski to the Hershey Bears in exchange for brothers Ralph (Scotty) Bowman already playing on loan here, and Frank Bowman, who is playing on loan with New Haven. Both are defensemen.

A deal between Washington and Hershey for Graboski has been brewing for some time, and Hershey reportedly stands ready to call Frank Bowman in from New Haven and send him here immediately in order to close the deal.

Lewis and Miller Resume Fistic Feud on Monday

One of the hottest middleweight matches Turner's Arena has seen in many a moon was fought a few weeks ago and the principals—Stoney Lewis and Taylor Miller—will be brought back for a return engagement on next Monday night's card.

They were rematched yesterday for an eight-rounder on the show featuring Buddy Komar, the McKeesport, Pa. heavyweight, and Georgie Parks, local colored scrapper.

Women's World Pin Tournament Postponed

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 5 (AP).—Mrs. Emma Phaler, secretary of the Women's International Bowling Congress, said today the executive board had postponed the Twenty-sixth Annual Women's World Bowling Tournament scheduled in Kansas City in May.

The postponement, first in history for the classic which last year attracted 1900 teams, was voted at the request of the Office of Defense Transportation.

Requested Returns, Wins Orleans Race

By the United Press

New Orleans, La., Jan. 5.—Ben Whitaker's Requested, one of the better 3-year-olds of 1942, made his first start in eight months today and ran to a one-length victory in the Hammond Purse at the Fair Grounds.

It was the first outing for the Whitaker colt since his game second back of Alsab in the Preakness. Under top weight of 122 pounds, he ran down the pacemakers in the stretch to win going away. Leon Haas was in the saddle as Requested turned 6 furlongs in 1:11 3-5. A warm favorite, he paid $3.60, $2.80 and $2.80.

Brandywine Stable's Pompion was second by a half length over the fast closing Vinum. Pompion returned $3.60 and $3.80, while Vinum was $9 to show.

Baltimore U. Beats Wilson Thrs., 36-30

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, Jan. 5.—The marked improvement predicted for the University of Baltimore's basketball team under the tutelage of the new coach, Dick Graveson, showed up tonight as the Bees defeated the Wilson Teachers College five of Washington, 36-30.

The game was an interesting, close affair. It was the Bees' first victory of the season against two previous losses.

Veteran Captain Paul Oberhaus was easily the top player with a total of eight goals and three free tries and it was all Oberhaus in the first half when he chalked up 11 of his outfit's 17 points.

Ernie Cole, center and main cog of the Teachers, who enters the Georgia Pre-Flight School tomorrow, paced his team with the aid of Harold Ifshin.

District Youth Wins Highest Rifle Honors

Going through a strenuous 15-part test of shooting proficiency in a Nation-wide qualification series which annually draws thousands of junior marksmen into competition, Philip Jordan of Washington has established himself as one of the country's outstanding junior riflemen as he became the winner of the Distinguished Riflemen Gold Bar.

The 15-year-old youth was awarded this highest of all national Rifle Association junior honors by the N. R. A. Junior Division here. He achieved it after proving his ability in the four standard shooting positions—prone, sitting

Glovers Enter Final Round Friday Night

The tenth annual Golden Gloves Boxing Tournament will be brought to a close at Turner's Arena Friday night at 8:30 o'clock when eight novice and seven senior crowns are contested for by 30 earnest youngsters.

A sell-out is assured for these championship finals, and indications are that several upsets and unprecedented thrills await spectators attending these bouts.

The seniors will be fighting for the all-expense trips to the New York Golden Gloves Tournament which are to reward the winner in each division and also for individual and team awards.

The novices not only will be bearing down for individual and team awards, but also will compete for the Congressman Fred A. Hartley Cup annually awarded the outstanding novice of the tournament.

The senior pairings:

Hoyas Favored Over Colonials

Rausch, the latter the driving, active type forward. Ed Gustafson, the set-shot artist, holds down the center post for the Colonials and at guard they are well fortified with Big John Konizewski, the football tackle, and Joey Gallagher, the pride of St. John's. The husky, loping Konizewski must not be underrated and in Gallagher Coach Art Zahn has a floor general, pot-shot artist and courtman of general all-round excellence.

G. W. has divided its scoring to date with Gallagher and Rausch both owning 39 points in four games, but every man in their starting line-up is to be reckoned with.

Georgetown has the edge in reserves over its midtown rival, particularly in Reilly, Potollochio and Ed Lavin. Two substitute artists for the Colonials are Bob Groetzinger and Ted Reichwein.

Georgetown Coach Elmer Ripley knows the Hoyas are favorites and for that reason he is scared. Ripley has looked forward to this talented club of his for some time, but he fully realizes that if anybody can upset the apple cart it is George Washington.

Tonight's game is the home game of the series for the George Washington students and their student books will be honored. Georgetown will be host in the second meeting March 1.

Grid Greats Given Awards at Banquet

end getting a roar of approval from every throat in the house.

A hopeful note was sounded by Admiral E. S. (Jerry) Land, president of the popular grid club, when he started the evening off with the assertion that "football can and must continue during the war."

Baseball came into the limelight when Vice President Bob Simmons called Clark Griffith, owner of the Washington Senators, to the microphone and read a document officially nominating the "Old Fox" for the baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N. Y., in the name of the Touchdown Club.

AND SOME NOTES:

So great was the hit made by Conselman that even during the acts of professional entertainers later in the evening diners were still talking about it . . . Grid fans at their homes also had a chance to hear the speech, for it was broadcast . . . Starting out by roasting himself and his recent talk which was inserted in the Congressional Record (during a filibuster), the graying teacher poked kindly fun at Maryland's Coach Clark Shaughnessy, coaches in general, his own Chicago Cardinals, his mentorship at Washington U. in St. Louis, and finally at the 1918 game in which Great Lakes defeated the Naval Academy with the only touchdown play "led by an admiral." . . .

Gridder Smith, after getting his award, made a neat crack . . . He credited much of his brilliance at Great Lakes to his teammates, ending with: "That's how Mr. Smith came to Washington" . . . Standing applause greeted Mrs. "Knocky" Thomas, the only lady presented, who took the past-president's bowl in place of her husband who is in the armed forces in Africa . . . The opening of a new Congress tday and service abroad forced several legislators and officers to miss the affair . . . Among these were Sam Rayburn, Speaker of the House; Alben Barkley, Senate Majority Leader; and Admiral Ernest J. King . . . Jim Magher, treasurer of the club, took down honors as its best grid selector during the recent season . . .

Yellow Mask Meets Dusek Here Tonight

The Yellow Mask comes back to Turner's Arena tonight, this time to pit his cunning against Rudy Dusek, the chief of the noted "Riot Squad," in the feature wrestling match—Promoter Joe Turner's first in two weeks.

Sooner or later someone is going to remove the lid from the Mask and reveal his identity. Until that happens his weekly appearances have served to make him a mysterious figure.

One thing is definite: the fans are unanimous in their opinions that when he is unmasked he will be someone virtually unknown in this section.

The Mask and Dusek are down for a one-hour time-limit. Oddly enough, both grapplers feature the cobra clutch, which was first introduced by Manjo Singh four years ago, and thus it will be interesting to see who "outcobras" the other.

Johnny Long, the lanky Baltimore shipyard worker, who was given the duke via disqualification over the Mask just before the holidays, engages Franz Schuman, a newcomer at the Arena, in a special 30-minute bout. Long is shooting for a battle with the winner.

In the semiwindup, Max Krauser of Poland and Henri Piers, the Flying Dutchman, will clash, while in the opener at 9 o'clock, Jack Kelly of Oregon will face Stanley Pinto, the Bohemian grappler.

Baseball Hears Landis Ruling On War Play

Cambria, the Senators' head scout, was in the anteroom waiting to report back to Clark Griffith, president of the Washington team.

The determination of a set area wherein clubs may train makes it possible for all teams to proceed at once with spring workout plans. The Chicago Cubs and White Sox, already set to go to French Lick Springs, Ind., and the Boston Red Sox, now planning to train at Tufts College in Medford, Mass., are the only ones certain on where they are going.

Compromise Date

The decision to open the season approximately one week later apparently was a compromise between the American League owners, who were understood to want an April 27 start, and the National loop chiefs, who favored retaining the original April 13 opening.

Traditionally, the major league season has opened on a Tuesday with Washington usually getting a one-day start, but the new schedule will call for the campaign to open on a Wednesday. No reason was announced for this shift from the time-honored opening day.

Landis said he was "utterly astounded by the number of miles saved by condensing spring training trips within a specific radius." He did not reveal precisely how many man-miles would be saved by the new restricted travel program.

Some of the team representatives, before scurrying home to set up their spring camps, drew this sketchy picture of their plans:

Cards Undecided

The St. Louis Cardinals will look around, but may explore Excelsior Springs, Mo., Owner Sam Breadon said.

The Boston Braves will hunt for a college fieldhouse near home, Secretary John J. Quinn hinted.

The Cleveland Indians "are looking around," commented President Alva Bradley.

The Pittsburgh Pirates are "uncertain," President Bill Benswanger reported.

The Brooklyn Dodgers probably will work out at Yale University, New Haven, Conn., said General Manager Branch Rickey.

The Detroit Tigers may do part of their conditioning at Benton Harbor, Mich., General Manager Jack Zeller stated.

And the Cincinnati Reds are in a spot, President Warren Giles lamented. The new training zone limits clubs to areas north of the Ohio River. "Right now," Giles said, "our ball park is precisely 3 feet u-n-d-e-r the Ohio River, because of flood waters."

Marcey Is High Man In Men's Major League

District League Star Lee Marcey captured individual honors in the men's major pin loop at Clarendon Bowling Center last night with a 154 single and 400 set for his Manning's Service team, while "Red" Fleisher's 140 sparked Suncrisp Products to three from Eddie's Tavern and high team set of 1722 as well. Boyer's Pharmacy rolled 608 to take game honors for the night.

Plumberettes Score In Clarendon Match

The Ladies' Major League at Clarendon Bowling Center was led last evening by Teammates Frances Yeatman and Kitty Rice, who had respective highs of 147-338 and 119-345 to spark their Heflin's Plumberettes to high team set of 1586 and a sweep over C. & P. Clerks. The Needle Shop won the game honors after totaling 559.

Postponements Upset Garden's Fight Program

By International News Service

New York, Jan. 5.—A couple of requests for postponements today threw the Twentieth Century Sporting Club's winter boxing schedule into confusion and caused a wholesale shake-up in plans for the coming month.

First, Matchmaker Nat Rogers received a wire from George Moore, manager of Henry Armstrong, asking that Henry's fight with Beau Jack January 29 be postponed so Armstrong could undergo a tonsilectomy. Then Allie Stolz, Newark, asked for a week's postponement of his January 15 date with Willie Pep, Hartford, in order to recover fully from a ptomaine poisoning attack.

Moore wired Rogers he would advise the 20th Century just as soon as Henry was ready to return to action. On his revised schedule Rogers now has the Jack-Armstrong tilt carded for February 19; the Stolz-Pep affair to replace it on the 29th of this month.

This leaves January 15 open and Rogers said he hoped to close a lightweight match between the winner of Friday night's Chester Rico-Bob Montgomery bout and another 135 pounder to fill that spot. Jaun Zurita, Los Angeles; Slugger White, Baltimore, or Joey Peralta, Tamaqua, Pa., are under consideration for this assignment.

Revolution. My arms were tied behind my back; my neck was pushed down in a grove and over my head was a big blade. The crowd was yelling, "Take it off! Take it off! Take it off!" A dozen Washington Post readers were in on the scaffold, holding up the guillotine knife and chanting, "No! No! No—a thousand times No."

I woke with a start and my wife swears the first words I said were, "Honey, take my face in the bathroom and wash it."

I'm writing this at 4 p. m., Boss. And Buttercup is cackling lustily at this moment in our cellar. Tell the truth, we are getting so we love her every pinfeather. As ever, POUNDS HAIGHT.

P. S.—I just heard a voice say, "Pop get the mop." All I can say is that I'm darned glad the consolation prize on Jerry Strong's program isn't 2¼-ton elephant.

Marred by fouls and tossups the first half was all Eastern's and they left the floor at the intermission with a seven-point lead. Third quarter score was 31-29 when a fresh Rambler squad took the floor to hold down Orange basketeers who threatened to connect on fake and tricky moving shots.

Di Mag May Quit After Divorce world-wide reputation first was revealed in a telephone conversation he had from Reno with a sports columnist of the San Francisco Examiner.

He Won't Talk

The Yankee Clipper told the Examiner: "Spring training won't concern me this year." Asked if that meant he would quit he replied: "I'm not saying; you can draw your own conclusions."

These remarks followed a question on what effect he thought the Yankee switch of training sites from Florida to the North would have on his playing.

"I'll be back in town in a few days and tell you what I'm going to do."

Did this mean he was going to announce his retirement for the duration?

"Maybe. I'll see you later," answered DiMag and hung up.

'Hap' Burtner Is Star As Pig Farm Wins

Young "Hap" Burtner, Takoma star and son of the manager of Convention Hall, again shone in the Commercial pin loop at Art Taylor's Takoma Recreation last night and posted scores of 152-418 for his Bratburd Pig Farm team. The house quintet rolled 579 for high team game with set honors going to the Americans after a 1621 pinfall.

The WASHINGTON Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

New Congress to Cut Nonwar Spending

THE SEVENTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, now opening, will live up to all advance notices of curtailing the Government's nonwar spending. But despite talk about a coalition of Republicans and conservative Democrats, don't look for any serious tampering with New Deal economic reforms.

With a presidential election coming up in 1944, the Republican leadership in both Houses will take no chances of antagonizing labor by supporting efforts of anti-New Deal Democrats to repeal the Wagner Labor Relations Act and the 40-hour week. Both of these laws will remain on the books.

Here's a roundup legislative preview of the new session:

DREW PEARSON

LABOR—The only legislation affecting organized labor with a good chance of being enacted will be a bill outlawing racketeering in labor unions and requiring international unions to register with the Government and publicly report their finances.

FARM—The farm bloc will have the upper hand in both Houses, is almost certain to force through legislation further increasing parity price ceiling on farm products. Such a step will open the door to runaway inflation, but farm bloc leaders are confident they have the votes to put it over anyway.

Agricultural spokesmen already are busy behind the scenes trying to negotiate a logroll, whereby they will withdraw their opposition to the 40-hour week if laborites reciprocate on the proposal for higher parity ceilings.

TAXES—Despite Senate agitation for a national sales tax, Congress will not accept it. However, don't be surprised if the House Ways and Means Committee works out a new pay-as-you-go formula for income taxation, probably calling for monthly payments.

ECONOMY—Wholesale slashes will be voted in the budgets of all Government departments except War, Navy, State and possibly, the Treasury.

INVESTIGATIONS—The Committees on Executive Expenditures in both Houses, which have been inactive for several years, will come to life with a bang. One agency whose spending activities will receive a thorough going-over is the Federal Works Agency.

For the first time, Representative Martin Dies will run into serious opposition over the continuance of his un-Americanism investigating committee.

Capital Chaff

ABOUT 250 TO 300 MARINES were AWOL just before a Marine Corps Division recently sailed. Turning up at camp just after it was too late to sail, there were too many to lock up in the brig and a lot slept outside under guard . . . So far the penalty for desertion has not been heavy until the third offense . . . Representative Wilburn Cartwright of Oklahoma grabbed off the honors when retiring House members were being toasted on the day Congress adjourned . . . No less than 17 colleagues, including five Republicans, delivered speeches paying tribute to the popular Oklahoman . . . Asked for comment on threats by isolationist Senator Burt Wheeler of Montana and Representative Clare Hoffman of Michigan to "investigate" him, William Maloney, the Justice Department's ace sleuth of subversive activities, replied: "I have no fears so long as the hearings are open to the public."

End of the Tank

Army ordnance experts now foresee the time when the tank, which made France fall, will be outmoded and discarded as a useful weapon. In fact, they say the tank will be discarded for large scale combat before this war is over.

Death of the tank is the antitank gun. If you can mount a large enough gun—and give it sufficient mobility—you can blow up the enemy's tanks and cripple his mechanized forces completely.

This is just what happened to Rommel in his recent African debacle. He had previously enjoyed superiority in antitank weapons. While the British were still using a 75 mm. gun, Rommel (the desert fox) brought into action an 88 mm. gun, and to conceal it from the British until they were on top of it, buried the guns in the sand.

This was what caused the rout of the British forces last June.

But now the British have stepped up the caliber. They have an American-made 105 mm. gun, mounted on a tank chassis, and it was this weapon, known as a tank destroyer, which outshot the German 88's and crippled the German tanks in the most recent battle of Egypt.

Thus the tank has met its Nemesis in the form of a tank destroyer. The only defense against the destroyer is to load on more armor—but the more the armor, the less mobility.

Ordnance experts see the next step as a step into the sky. In other words, the next tank will be an airplane. It will be a heavily armored plane, protected by fighter escort, and moving at low altitudes to do from the air the same sort of destruction which the tank has been able to do from the ground.

Meanwhile, the tank is still operating in Russia. But experts here are awaiting the time when the tank destroyer (105 mm. gun) appears on the Russian side, to blast German tanks out of action. It is merely a matter of shipping.

Donovan's Machine Gun

THERE WAS A BUZZ of excitement when a man who said he represented Col. William Donovan, chief of the Office of Strategic Services, showed up at the Treasury Department's Procurement Division, demanding a machine gun.

The Procurement Division has a bristling armory of revolvers, sawed-off shotguns and other weapons which have been confiscated under the "illegal possession" clause of the National Firearms Act. As it happened, there was one Thompson submachine gun in the collection.

"That will do," said the man. However, he stubbornly refused to reveal what the gun was to be used for, on the ground that this was military information. "Colonel Donovan needs it right away," he kept insisting.

Procurement officials finally agreed to turn over the "Tommie" gun if they had a letter from Donovan authorizing the transfer. The OSS representative departed with a grunt, but returned the next morning, bearing a letter from Donovan and received the weapon.

However, the Procurement Division still would like to know what Col. "Wild Bill" Donovan, famous for his military exploits in the last war, wants with a submachine gun in his capacity as boss of the Government's busiest, and most secretive, war intelligence unit.

Head of A.B.A. At White House For Conference

In his first call on President Roosevelt as president of the American Bankers Association, W. L. Hemingway of St. Louis said he assured the Chief Executive yesterday of "the continued support of the bankers of this country in the war effort."

HEMINGWAY

Hemingway, asked by reporters as to the bankers' views on domestic policies, said they were supporting the rationing program and were "going to do everything we can to help the OPA program." The bankers, he added, are "in sympathy with the governmental efforts to control inflation."

War financing, he said, was discussed in a general way at his conference with the President, and he remarked that "we are all pleased at the outcome of this last, December financing."

He had "no comment" when asked his views on the $25,000 salary limitation.

B. & O. Promotes Two Here.

A. M. Brinker was promoted to the position of general freight agent of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at Washington, effective as of January 1. He succeeds J. H. Hague who was recently transferred to St. Louis as general freight agent.

John J. Collins succeeds Mr. Brinker as assistant general freight agent, being advanced from the position of district freight agent.

Brinker began his railroad career with the B. & O. in the Cumberland offices of the company as messenger in 1919, and came to Washington in 1932. Except for a short assignment in the B. & O. offices in Jacksonville, Fla., he has continued in freight office here.

Knudsen Praised As Trouble-Shooter

Patterson Credits Him With 10% War Production Rise

By William F. Frye
Associated Press Staff Writer

The chief trouble shooter of the Army production program, Lieut. Gen. William S. Kundsen, was credited by his boss yesterday with lifting military production by at least 10 per cent.

"I suppose," said Undersecretary of War Robert P. Patterson, "that General Knudsen spends two-thirds of his time trouble-shooting. It's production-line trouble-shooting. The practical solution of immediate problems on the spot."

Inventory Tells Story

Knudsen himself, reluctant to discuss his own activities, was quite willing to talk about the production job done by American industry, commenting:

"In this blitzkrieg era of ours, it's the inventory that tells the story. And as far as I can figure, we're producing about twice as much as anybody else.

"Of course, we can always do better. But we've never had much trouble with business, particularly since Pearl Harbor, and they work hard."

Knudsen was president of General Motors when he came to Washington in 1940 on the old National Defense Advisory Commission. He later was director general of OPM, and for a year has been the War Department's director of production.

Patterson credited him with improved manufacturing techniques in most major war industries, originating the substitution of materials for critical items such as making shell casings of steel instead of brass.

Laid Out Program

"I suppose more than any other one man. He laid out our aircraft production program," Patterson told an interviewer. "The same thing has been true all along the line—explosive plants, shell loading plants, small arms ammunition, and so on."

The problem of small plants participating in the war production program has been largely outside Knudsen's province—"I never was much of a 'bits and pieces' man," he confided. But he suggested one explanation of at least part of the problem.

"American industry is mass production industry, and mass production takes an engineering staff," said Knudsen. "Most of these small plants don't have the engineers to work out our problems. Now, our job was to get the stuff out, not to put the small plant in business. Of necessity, that meant working with companies who have engineering staffs to meet the problems."

Job for Army

Patterson declared that production of military equipment is a job that only the Army can plan, and therefore only the Army should control.

"Nobody else knows what we need," he said, "and nobody else is competent to place the orders, supervise the production, make the inspections, accept deliveries.

"Added to that is the very practical argument that the present system is working, and working extremely well. Why change it in the middle of a war?

"The Army has never had any intention or any desire to control the civilian economy. To begin with, we couldn't do it. We don't know as much about it as the civilians who are running it, whose job it is to run it.

"In the second place, we are one of the claimants, not the sole claimant. Enough has got to be saved out of the entire program for the railroads, the mines, the other essential civilian activities, and there must be some impartial agency to make the decision between us."

Asks More Planes

Hill Says Air Could Be Rid Of Jap Fliers

Maj. David L. Hill of Hunt, Tex., a squadron leader of the China Air Task Force—the old "Flying Tigers"—said yesterday that with new equipment in large quantities, the Japanese air force could be destroyed from bases in China.

"If we get enough stuff in there we can take them," he said at a press conference. "I don't think we can do it anywhere else in the world. Nobody else knows their tactics like General Chennault. He's a genius—a man who never lost a battle, and I'll put my money on a man like that any day."

Hill said the Japanese were now using two new and improved fighters: The 97-2, a single-engine fighter with a considerable edge in speed over the Zero, and the 1-45, a twin-engine, high-altitude plane. The latter, he said, has been in use for a long time as a reconnaissance plane, but last summer began appearing in a fighter version. This conversion meant some loss in performance from the reconnaisance type, but it is still, he said, a high-performance, high-altitude ship.

However, Hill said the American Army Air Forces still lead the Japanese in equipment and tactics.

"That's obvious," he said. "It's a matter of record that we don't lose planes to them—we have always managed to shoot them down. They are not tough to crack. Wherever we meet them, we defeat them."

Hill, who said he would like to get some new qeuipment and get back to China, has 16 confirmed victories over Japanese planes and 20 probables to his credit.

He praised the skill and fighting qualities of Chinese pilots, with whom he said he had spent considerable time in northern China.

"They have got some mighty fine boys, and they are well trained," he said. "When they get their equipment they are going to show up well. They want to fight."

Vice Trial Set Tuesday for Five

Municipal Judge Armond Scott yesterday set Tuesday for the trial of five men accused of operating disorderly houses in small downtown hotels which were recently raided by the Metropolitan Police.

Two of the men, said to be clerks in the hotels, pleaded not guilty yesterday and their bail was fixed at $500. They were Edward L. Boyles and Frank W. Ferris, 54. Previously, not guilty pleas were entered by Rolge Anderson, 35; Clay Darnell, 63, and Kachig Harry, 53.

StomachOperation Removes Tooth Seaman Swallowed

The Navy yesterday told of an unusual operation recently performed on a seaman to remove a false tooth he had swallowed while asleep.

The tooth, set in a 2-inch-long plate became deeply lodged in the man's esophagus, and defied all efforts to extract it via his throat, according to the latest issue of the Naval Medical Bulletin.

Capt. Horace R. Boone, now chief of the surgical service at the Naval Hospital, Bethesda, Md., then at the Corpus Christi, Tex., naval hospital, operated. He made a one-inch incision in the man's stomach and removed the tooth with forceps. The operation was successful.

Confirmation Rider Delays War Manpower

That Senate rider which makes all employes paid more than $4500 subject to Senate confirmation is playing hob with war manpower.

Topnotch people won't accept jobs when they are required to get political clearances. The entire manpower program is being crippled and delayed by the rider . . . At War Production Board no division may work its employes more than 48 hours a week unless prior approval is given by the administrative officer . . . Incidentally, WPB's administrative officer, James G. Robinson, is resogning to become collector of internal revenue for Persia. He has done a swell job considering what he had to contend with.

The Department is considering a plan to put a ceiling on the amount of overtime civilian employes may be required to work in any day. The ban is expected to cut out of lots of useless overtime. Like WPB, prior approval must be had now before the employe can be worked more than 48 hours. When approval is given, the employe will be paid for the additional work on an overtime basis. The Department also has been asked to rule on whether an employe who's working overtime must take time off for supper or whether the employe will be given a few minutes off and be paid for the time. It appears to be a good bet that the employe will be paid for the time he takes off to eat a snack.

The Victory Tax deductions that appeared here last week were correct. The entire pay scale was confirmed by the official pay table of the General Accounting Office. Frankly, I don't know how the pay table was computed, but it's what you'll have deducted from your pay checks nevertheless. For example, employes paid $1200, $1260, $1320 and $1380 each will have $1.90 each payday deducted from their checks for the Victory Tax. A tax of $4.20 will be deducted from employes who earn from $2040 to $2400; $5.20 from $2400 to $2800; $6.20 from $2800 to $3000, etc. The tax will be made on the gross amount of your check, base pay plus overtime.

A story is being told by Federal officials about a Japanese spy who came here to pick out Government buildings to be bombed. The spy was here for some weeks investigating. Finally, he sent this message to Tokyo: "Useless to bomb Washington. Americans do the same thing in four different places. Smart, these Americans."

The 1000 annual employes of the Government Printing Office will be paid overtime for hours worked after 40. The 7000 mechanical employes paid on an hourly basis can't be benefited by the Overtime Pay Act, but Public Printer A. E. Giegengack is believed ready to raise their rates if the employes will withdraw their peition for higher salaries now before the Joint Congressional Committee on Printing. It's still unsettled whether employes of the Superintendent of Documents will be paid overtime. Comptroller General Lindsey Warren was asked for a decision on the matter late yesterday. The fact is that Warren ruled that no employes of GPO could be paid overtime of the 10 per cent under the pay act. The public printer, however, has used the authority he already possesses to grant overtime to his annual employes.

The 7000 hourly employes stand an excellent chance to get pay raises now that all other Federal workers have had their salaries raised. The public printer denied a petition for increase last February and the employes appealed to the committee. A spokesman explained that conditions have changed in the meantime but that Giegengack would make no move toward increasing salaries while the appeal lay before the joint committee. "If the appeal were withdrawn," he said, "then the public printer would be in a position to act and I believe he would." It's expected that the 241 annual employes of the Superintendent of Documents Office will be paid overtime in some manner. However, the Comptroller's decision wasn't clear on that point. GPO is considered to be a legislative establishment in some decisions. However, Warren, in another decision, okayed 10 per cent raises for legislative employes.

Federal agencies must enter nominations for the December Better Government Contest by Friday. The winner will be awarded a $100 war bond by this newspaper . . . Federal Public Housing employes have made 60 suggestions for improvement of the Federal service in recent weeks. A number have been put into effect by Commissioner Herbert Emmerick that will save money and make for efficiency . . . Les Evans has been appointed assistant personnel director of Federal Works to succeed Clarence Osthagen who's a captain in the Air Forces . . . An interesting new book, "Opportunities in the Armed Forces," has been released by Viking Press. Authors are Max Lehman and Morton Yarmon, two Civil Service experts.

Fire Was Hot Enough

Baltimore (A.P.).—Thomas B. Pence, now of Baltimore, was granted an absolute divorce in Circuit Court yesterday. He claimed his wife, Mrs. Rose Zetta Pence, of Stanley, Va., refused to live with in-laws even after her home burned down.

Uncle Sam Relents

Richmond, Va.—In an informal ruling, the United States collector of internal revenue has advised that the State need not for the present deduct the 5 per cent Victory Tax from the $70-a-month pensions paid to Virginia's 42 surviving Confederate veterans.

The ruling was not final, but the pensions will not be regarded as taxable income until further notice.

Traffic Light Cut Possible Here Soon

Plan to Eliminate Some Signals, Add Speed Studied, Van Duzer Says

Elimination of traffic signals at some Washington intersections is possible within the next few weeks, William A. Van Duzer, Director of Traffic, revealed yesterday.

The disclosure was simultaneous with a demand of the Office of Defense Transportation that cities "put more 'go' and less 'stop' in the Nation's traffic lights."

It appeared last night that the District is far ahead of other large cities in an effort to speed up wartime transportation.

Van Duzer asserted that a survey was begun last summer to determine from actual traffic counts what, if any, traffic signal devices could be abolished.

"Tabulations are still being made," the traffic director said, "and it probably will be a week or so before the statistics are available. At that time it will be possible to state definitely whether there are any needless traffic lights."

Mr. Van Duzer indicated, however, there already is a possibility of lights being eliminated at 15 or 20 corners and cited Maryland Avenue Northeast as an example. He pointed out that the avenue between Second and Fourteenth Streets Northeast has shown a decided decrease in automobile traffic "probably due to the lack of Washington-to-Baltimore driving."

Three Tasks of Lights

Traffic signals have three major tasks, according to the traffic director, and the direction of motor vehicles is only one of them. Lights, he said, are necessary, also, for the protection of pedestrians and as "speed regulators."

"There has been a 30 per cent increase in pedestrian traffic here in the past year," said he. "Though automobile driving has dropped off 23 per cent, the increase in walking warrants most of our signals."

He explained that traffic lights are erected under "warrant statistics" supplied by the Institute of Traffic Engineers. This means that lights are justified if automobile traffic numbers 1000 vehicles and/or 200 pedestrians an hour.

"Washington lights are generally not erected until a warrant of 1500 cars and/or 250 walkers is counted.

"Lights will not be eliminated at any intersection where there is still a volume of pedestrian traffic," he declared. "We must do everything possible this year to reduce traffic fatalities, and most of them are pedestrians."

Twenty-seven accidents occurred in November at intersections, usually controlled by traffic signals, after the lights were extinguished at 1 a. m.

"Only 480 of our 5600 intersections are controlled by lights," Van Duzer said, 'and the longest wait at any light is 40 seconds. Some are only 3 seconds."

Van Duzer's statements followed an announcement from ODT of a conference of street traffic experts to be held here January 14.

Eastman Called Meeting

Joseph B. Eastman, director of ODT, called the meeting "because of an increasing number of complaints regarding the time wasted by war workers waiting for traffic lights to change."

Last April, in a statement of policy, the transportation director said:

"Traffic regulations and controls have generally been operated to facilitate the movement of automobiles. During the present emergency the movement of mass transit vehicles should take precedence, and the efficient movement of such vehicles should be the major consideration in the timing of traffic control devices."

Traffic experts from most major cities, including Van Duzer, have been invited to attend Eastman's conference.

2 Women Open Training Today Aboard Capital Transit Vehicles

"MRS. CONDUCTOR"—Mrs. Betty Christine Whitehurst, 27, of 4523 Arkansas Avenue Northwest, will go on training duty as conductor. Arthur W. Hall, instructor, observes as Jake (Jockey) Jacobs, passenger, steps on

The first women ever hired to drive Washington buses and streetcars will make their debut today with the Capital Transit Co., although it will be a month or more before they actually take over the controls of any transit vehicle.

The women, Mrs. Dorothy Isole Berlett of 929 Potomac Avenue Southeast and Mrs. Betty Christine Whitehurst of 4523 Arkansas Avenue Northwest, will be introduced to their new jobs today when they will accompany instructors for a "few hours."

They will be familiarized with conductor work for seven days and in another week or so will be taken for instructions on cars without passengers. Two weeks of practice in regular service will follow and after that the women, if qualified, will be employed as conductors.

George W. Cramer, superintendent of operating and training for Capital Transit, said yesterday the two women eventually will drive buses, but all persons breaking in must first work as conductors.

Cramer added that as many women as possible will be hired to replace men called into the armed services.

While in training for their new jobs the women will be paid $3 a day. After they qualify for the work they will be paid 77 cents an hour, with a guarantee of $33 a week, the regular salary for beginners.

Cramer said he didn't expect the women to work as long and as hard as the men, but they will put in most of their time during the rush hours, about five hours a day. They will be closely observed for 90 days and then they will be on their own, he added.

Mrs. Berlett, 26, whose husband is in the Navy and stationed at the Navy Yard, doesn't think her new job will be difficult. Mrs. Whitehurst, 27, whose husband is employed by Capital Transit, echoed Mrs. Berlett's sentiment. Asked if she had answers ready for any wise cracks she may encounter, Mrs. Whitehurst replied she had plenty. "After all, I didn't work as a waitress for 11 years for nothing," she said.

Philadelphia Opera Acclaimed For Performance of Figaro

By Ray C. B. Brown.

National Symphony Orchestra Association presents the Philadelphia Opera Company and the National Symphony Orchestra in a performance of Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro" in English on Tuesday night in Constitution Hall. The Cast of characters:

Count Almaviva, Howard Vanderburg
Countess Almaviva . . Emma Beldan
Figaro . . . . . Robert Brink
Susanna . . . . . Sylvia Morgan
Cherubino . . . . . Margaret Spencer
Marcellina . . . . . Catherine Latta
Bartolo . . . . . Leon Lishner
Basilio . . . . . John Hamill
Antonio . . . . . Joseph Lutz
Barberina . . . . . Sue Griska
Curzio . . . . . Hamilton Benz
Conductor: Sylvan Levin

Using an English text arranged by their conductor, Sylvan Levin, the vivacious Philadelphia Opera Company won over their second Washington audience last evening in Constitution Hall in a performance of Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro." Perhaps because they felt the discipline of the classical style, the singers were more restrained than they had been on the previous night in Johann Straus' "The Flittermouse," and the result of this control in vocal quality was commendable. Tonal color and refinement in phrasing were much more in evidence, and the comedy was handled with a finesse that made the points more effective. The performance was enjoyable for its zest and the excellent team work of the cast.

BROWN

It is somewhat ironic that two of the most politically subversive plays ever written, Beaumarchais' "The Barber of Seville" and "The Marriage of Figaro," should have survived into the twentieth century in all cultured countries in the form of musical comedies utterly devoid of political implications. Because Louis XVI of France perceived the dangerous ideas contained in these plays, he quietly placed obstacles in the way of their performance, but they were finally staged in 1775 and 1784. Their success not only in France but throughout Europe was so marked that it became inevitable that they should be set to music. The composers wisely left out the politics and concentrated upon the comedy.

Needless confusion has been caused by some "opera guides" which tell us that Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro," composed in 1785-1786, is a sequel to Rossini's "The Barber of Seville," composed in 1816. As a matter of fact, as far as musical settings are concerned, Mozart's opera is a sequel to Paisiello's "The Barber of Seville," which was produced in St. Petersburg in 1780. Of course, the two plays are serially related as Beaumarchais wrote them.

Mozart had composed a number of works for the stage before his genius as a writer of opera suddenly unfolded in "The Marriage of Figaro." In form and in intrigue it is a light opera, and as such it is generally accepted by the public. But underneath the delightful entertainment runs a current of earnestness which finds expression in the remakable characterization in the music. Disillusionment and melancholy are moods disclosed in the cavatina of Countess Almaviva in the second scene, and Susanna's aria in the garden scene has deep and passionately tender feelings.

Early nineteenth-century romanticists, Beethoven among them, dismissed both "The Marriage of Figaro" and "Don Giovanni" as trivial and frivolous comedies unworthy of a great composer. They did not study profoundly enough the implicit moral teaching of the music. Amid all the fun and frolic of the lighter passages there is a serious intent. The genuine love of Figaro and Susanna is glorified by the music, which expresses the sincerest compassion for the unhappy Countess and scourges the licentiousness of the Count with whips of scorn.

Sale of Car Tokens by Stores Suggested as Time-Saver

The lady—may her number decrease—who holds up long lines of would-be riders on street cars and buses while she explores the distant reaches of her 4-foot-square pocketbook in a seemingly endless search for money, was taken to task yesterday—and by a member of her own sex.

Not only did Mrs. B. G. McIlwee, 517 Peabody Street Northwest, condemn the practice; she suggested a remedy.

"Why not sell streetcar and bus tokens in drug and grocery stores throughout the city? Housewives doing their marketing could secure the tokens along with the groceries; men could get them along with their cigarettes," she told a Post reporter.

"Soon," said Mrs. McIlwee, "it would become something of a habit, and I'm convinced it would help tremendously in speeding up the flow of traffic in this congested city."

She said she would present her idea to the Manor Park Citizens' Association, of which she is a member.

A spokesman for the Capital Transit Co. said yesterday: "Through experience we have found that it is best that tokens be bought from the streetcar or bus operators themselves. Setting up such an organization as suggested would involve setting up a large distributing and collecting unit which would be impractical."

39 Day-Care Projects Approved

Grants of Lanham Funds Liberalized, Easing Way for War Nurseries

Presidential approval of 39 war nurseries and day-care centers for children of working mothers, to be financed from Lanham Act funds, was announced yesterday by Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, Federal Works administrator. This is the largest group of projects yet to be approved at a single time under the FWA child-care program.

Many of these projects were made possible by suspension of the practice requiring a community requesting Lanham War Public Services funds to certify financial inability to provide the necessary facilities. General Fleming explained that this requirement has been waived in order to meet urgent needs in communities where already established budgets had not included nursery school provision.

"As a result," Fleming said "early approval of hundreds of war nurseries and child care centers in all parts of the country is to be expected."

Fees to Be Charged

Thirty-six of the nurseries and centers approved will be located in Salt Lake City, Utah, and the remaining three, all nurseries, will be located at Medford, Oreg.

Criterion of the necessity of nurseries and child care centers is the need for war employment of women.

"If, as is the case at both Salt Lake City and Medford," Fleming said, "meeting war production schedules necessitates employment of women on a large scale, then the FWA is ready to underwrite the cost of providing adequate care for the children of women workers, through nursery schools and child care centers. The only requirement we make is that fees be charged, and that the money so received be used to buy food, which FWA does not supply. Once a community has established its need for child care assistance, and has shown this need results from war activities, we will process its application just as rapidly as we can."

No Action for D. C.

Fleming aided that where WPA nurseries or child care centers are eligible for Lanham funds, they will be continued until permanent arrangements are made for new sponsorship.

Mrs. Florence Kerr, deputy commissioner of Work Projects and special assistant to the Federal Works Administrator in charge of War Public Services projects, explained that fees charged parents will be on a sliding-scale basis, in accordance with ability to pay. War nurseries, she said, provide care for children under 5, while centers provide supplemental care and supervision, before and after school and on school holidays for 5 to 12 year old children of working mothers.

The six nurseries and the 30-day care centers at Salt Lake will be operated by the Board of Education, to which $112,200 of Lanham Act funds have been alloted. The three nurseries at Medford will be operated by School District No. 49, using a Lanham allotment of $12,163.

Meanwhile here in the District an overall application for unrseries and child-care centers has not yet been sent to FWA.

City News In Brief

Driving permits of 3172 District and 1006 out-of-town motorists were suspended or revoked during 1942 for traffic law violations, Edward R. Deane, chairman of the Board of Permit and Revocation and Restoration, revealed yesterday.

In addition, he reported that the board suspended 407 licenses to drive in cases where the holder failed to satisfy judgments in accidents. The latter actions were taken under Washington's financial responsibility law.

Death Called Accident

A certificate of accidental death due to burns was issued yesterday by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald, closing the investigation of a fire which cost the life of Capt. Maurice Marshall Berck, 38, Army Medical Corps.

Son-in-law of Generalissimo Rafael Trujillo, President of the Dominican Republic, Captain Berck died at Emergency Hospital Monday night a short time after he was found unconscious in his fire-swept apartment at the Brighton Hotel, 2123 California Street Northwest.

Funeral arrangement had not been completed last night.

Vaccination of Government Workers Is in Full Swing

VACCINATED—Dr. C. C. Dauer of the District Health Department vaccinates Pat Kennedy of the Bureau of Investigation and Research

The program for preventing contagious diseases among Government employes here is now in full swing with 665 persons having received immunization injections for typhoid fever and 597 vaccinations for smallpox.

OCD and Bureau of Investigation and Research workers were treated yesterday in the Dupont Circle Apartments by Dr. C. C. Dauer of the District Health Department.

Begun late last year when an outbreak of smallpox in Pennsylvania created a stir along the East Coast, the program is under the direction of the Office of Emergency Management with the medical officer being supplied by the District Health Department. It is hoped that the entire Government personnel here can be immunized through the program, which is slated for expansion in the near future.

Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, assistant health officer for the District, recently warned that smallpox was coming nearer Washington, with one case reported in Philadelphia last week. This, coupled with the outbreak last week of 28 cases in Lewisburg, Pa., considerably alarmed the local health office, he said.

He recommended that old Government employes who had not been vaccinated in the past five years be revaccinated. An appeal also was made to local hotels and rooming houses for the immunization of staff and guests.

Victory Sidelights

Bolles Urges 4000 Wardens To Complete Their Training

Col. Lemuel Q. Bolles, executive director of District civilian defense, yesterday issued an appeal to all air-raid wardens who face disqualification for failure to complete training "to remember the necessity for protecting the Capital of the Nation and complete the required courses."

Colonel Bolles said the training courses, which some 4000 wardens have neither taken nor enrolled for, were necessary to establish civilian defense as an organized and cohesive unit rather than a group of well-meaning individuals.

Actually, the number of wardens who will lose equipment because of failure to comply with regulations is less than earlier figures indicated, the colonel said. There are 23,366 wardens in the District and of these less than 7000 have not been certified or are not eligible for certification. Another 3000 are enrolled in courses. Thus approximately 4000 is the top number which may be dropped from the rolls. An earlier figure of 20,000 persons facing disqualification included fire watchers and messengers who come under less drastic training regulations, which did not include the December 31 disqualification deadline.

For those affected by the disqualification, Colonel Bolles said: "Any individual who feels himself unjustly affected by the order specifying the necessity for the training courses should take his case to his senior, deputy or zone warden for consideration. If the facts are frankly put before his superiors some means will be formulated to utilize his services.

Extensions Available

"Persons prevented from completing courses in which they had previously enrolled before the deadline through circumstances beyond their control will be accorded extensions for completion of their courses."

Far from showing a lagging spirit, the colonel pointed out, Washington is far ahead of any city of comparable size in the country as far as an effective organized defense force is concerned. He said this was as it should be, since the capital city of any country is the number one target for its enemies.

"And," Colonel Bolles pointed with pride, "one in every four and one-half adults in the District is engaged in some form of civilian defense."

50-Hour Awards Await Civilian Warworkers

Persons who have completed at least 50 hours service in nonprotective civilian war agencies may apply between 2 and 6 p. m. on Wednesdays and from 11 a. m. to 3 p. m. on Fridays for their awards at the Civilian Defense Booth, Fourteenth and Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest, it was announced yesterday.

The basic Service Corps insignia represents 50 hours of volunteer service. Service of 500 hours or more entitles the volunteer to a silver pin.

Only volunteers who have registered with the Civilian Defense Volunteer Organizations are eligible. Members of protective services will be recognized through the Citizens Defense Corps.

Citizen Unit to Sample Bombing Time Fare

The Connecticut Avenue Citizens Association will get a taste of the kind of fare they may be served in case of a bombing and the OCD Emergency Feeding and Housing Unit of the area will get a practice work-out in serving it, when the association meets tomorrow at 8 p. m. in All Souls' Episcopal Church, Cathedral and Connecticut Avenues Northwest.

At a given signal, the E. F. and H. unit under Mrs. W. Stokes Sammons, will swing into action as if those at the meeting had been bombed from their homes and will serve the sort of refreshments that have been provided for emergencies.

Quarters Quickly Found For Visiting Soldiers

How well organized is the servicemen's lodging committee of the War Hospitality Committee was demonstrated yesterday afternoon when, immediately after adjourning, it was informed that about 100 Negro soldiers were in Washington and in need of sleeping quarters for the night.

Everybody on the committee apparently rushed to a phone, and within an hour the men were slated for one of six places.

Fort Myer Will Not Hold Horse Show on President's Birthday

The War Department yesterday notified local committee for the celebration of the President's Birthday that Fort Myer would not be available for the horse show—traditional feature of the celebration.

Wartime conditions prevent use of the reservation, it was stated.

The committee has fixed prices for the dinner dances at $3, plus the cost of the meal. These dances will be held at the Shoreham and Hamilton hotels.

Plain dances will be held at the Mayflower, Shoreham, Wardman Park, Willard, and Washington hotels, and the Lincoln Colonnade. Prices will be $2.50, excepting at the Colonnade, where the charge will be $2. At all of the events on January 30 every visiting Hollywood star will appear, in addition to Mrs. Roosevelt.

The celebration's main banquet will be held at the Mayflower on January 29, with all stars present. The price is $10 and attendance will be limited to the capacity of the banquet hall.

The "Command Performance" at the National Theater will be held Sunday, January 24. Eight stars from Hollywood are expected.

Action Set For Stricter Fire Control

Frequent Checkups Of Rooming House Escapes Scheduled; Eating Places Next

Action for stricter enforcement of District fire regulations for boarding and rooming houses will be begun this morning when ten workers from the OCD Central Volunteer Bureau will start transcribing data from the Rent Administration office for the use of fire inspectors in the check-up of such premises ordered by the Commissioners yesterday.

Following the immediate house-to-house survey, a more regular, more frequent schedule of periodic inspections will be followed, in order that no rooming or boarding house may slip into infraction of fire regulations and get away with it very long, the officials said.

The Commissioners' action followed inquiry into the fire at a Euclid Street rooming house last week which cost the lives of two persons. A report from Assistant Engineer Commissioner Joseph D. Arthur yesterday revealed that no occupancy permit had been taken out for this house, and that rapid spread of the flames was "contributed to the use of paper wallboard and temporary partitions, the use of which was not covered by permit issued by the District Government."

Night Club Report Due

A report on a wholesale inspection of restaurants and night clubs, which the Commissioners were incited to order by the Coconut Grove catastrophe in Boston last month, was expected to be presented later in the week.

The most common violation of fire regulations that the city-wide inspection is expected to reveal is overcrowding of tenants into one house with resulting inadequacy of fire escapes. Under the present rules, outside fire escapes must be installed in any house three or more stories high and accommodating 10 or more persons above the first floor. Regulation fireproofed staircases and self-closing firedoors are acceptable in the place of the outside escapes.

From the rent control files, the 10 women supplied by Mrs. Harry S. Bernton's volunteer office will compile a complete list of every rooming house in the District, with the premise number, the name of the operator, the number of stories, of occupants, of fire escapes and of bathtubs. The possession of a rooming house license and an occupancy permit also will be noted.

Operators Must Comply

If a rooming house operator cannot get the fire escapes installed, his only alternative would be to reduce his number of tenants—which could mean widespread eviction of many roomers in the already almost room-less city.

However, large-scale rooming houses already have such fire escapes, and the WPB has said that high priority rating would be given applications for steel for necessary fire escapes. Private homes, which the Commissioners yesterday again asked to be opened to as many war-workers as possible, would not be affected by the more stringent regulation enforcement except in the rare cases where there were 10 or more occupants living above the first floor.

Perplexity over the problems of the geometrically mounting population led the Commissioners to delay drastic action on fire regulation enforcement, but with the recent District and Boston examples before them, they have decided to eliminate known fire hazards even at the cost of curtailing much-needed rooming accommodations.

Commercial Rent Control Sought Here

Legislation providing for control of commercial property rents in the District of Columbia, regulation which was sought but not achieved during the last Congressional session, was being prepared yesterday for submission to the 78th Congress.

Backing the early enactment of such controls are Representative Randolph (Democrat) of West Virginia, House District Committee chairman, and Representative Crawford (Republican) of Michigan.

Crawford was the author of a similar local business rent freeze bill in the last session, prompted by numerous complaints that rents were being unmercifully jacked up on business renters here. The present District rent control act covers only residential rates.

In a letter asking this approval, Randolph pointed to the many complaints which had been received of commercial rent squeezes in the city. He cited particularly the case of a downtown secretarial school whose rents had reportedly been jumped more than 200 per cent, and urged that quick action must be taken to protect small businessmen from profiteering landlords.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Courted by Captain in Air Force, Who Is on Verge Of Proposing, Girl Meets His Younger Brother, an Officer in Marines, and It's Love at First Sight

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl of 19 years of age, and very much in love with a 23-year-old lieutenant in the Marines. I first met him when I was out with his 26-year-old brother, who is a captain in the Air Force. The lieutenant and I fell in love with each other that first night, but he was leaving town the next day, so I continued to date his brother. The lieutenant came home on furlough three days before Christmas and called me for a date. (In the meantime, we had been writing to each other). Well, I went out with him and he told me he loved me; but that his brother knew nothing of our interest in each other.

The next night, I had a date with the captain,—which had been made a week before. He, also, told me that he loved me. And while I am very much in love with the lieutenant, I can't seem to decide what to do. I am sure the captain is going to ask me to marry him. But the lieutenant will be in town this weekend, and I feel sure he will definitely propose at that time, because some mention of marriage has already been made. Before he arrives, I must have some advice.

While I very much want to marry the lieutenant, I don't know whether or not to say, "yes," if he does propose. Since his brother is also in love with me, how would I feel if I married his brother and became a member of his family and saw him more or less constantly,—after he has told me that he never will love anybody but me? I would like a clear-thinking opinion on this question before I see the lieutenant again; and will thank you for an immediate reply.

M. L. S.

Don't 'Dream Up' Dramatic Difficulties

DEAR M. L. S.: If you are in love with the lieutenant and he loves you, then it seems to me you would be justified in provisionally accepting his proposal of marriage,—IF he does propose. And don't "think" yourself into a difficult situation, in regard to his brother, by imaginatively preparing for melodramatic complications in that direction. Don't, for instance, dwell on mental pictures of being coyly or compassionately on the defensive against him at future meetings, in the event you do become engaged,—and eventually married,—to the lieutenant.

Your attitude toward him should be one of cordial good will and sisterly affection. In his own right, he has been one of your most devoted friends,—who has paid you the honor of saying he loves you. In addition, he is the brother of the man you love; and, more than that, he is the person you have to thank for making you acquainted with your "true love." All of which gives you substantial reason for thinking most kindly of him; but no reason at all for supposing you necessarily would be in for an awkward time of it, if you become the fiancee or bride of his younger brother. The situation is yours to command, with poise and grace, if your own mental address and social manner toward him is straightforwardly "right," beginning now, with your conviction that you intend,—God willing,—to wed his brother. And the right attitude means being cheerfully affectionate but cleanly unsentimental, in every aspect of your dealings with him from this day on.

Win Captain's Respect By Playing Fairly

Also, it seems to me, you must act in such a way as to develop and retain the older man's respect for your ability to play fairly. Thus, now that your heart is definitely "set" on the younger man, and now that you are already tacitly half-committed to him, it would be thoroughly unsporting to lend any encouragement whatsoever to a formal proposal from the captain. You should be on guard against such a possibility; and should be on the lookout for the earliest tactful opportunity to let him know that you were, from the first, tremendously "taken" with his brother. So, if you should be having another date with him before the lieutenant comes home,—don't go on playing a "maybe" game with him.

If he should be first to propose, despite your best efforts to prevent that denouement, tell him frankly, in effect: "I'm sorry, Dick, but I don't love you that way. There was a time when I guess I thought I did; and if you had asked me then, I might have said yes. That was before I met Jim. I am in love with him. I realize it more as time goes on, though I have seen him only twice, as perhaps you know. I am telling you this because I think I owe you the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth; and I am trusting you, on your honor, to say nothing about this to Jim. I suppose the reason I have liked you so very much is because you're so much like Jim; and the reason I don't love you is because you aren't him! Aren't women the crazy creatures?" Etc. Take the bull by the horns to bid for his friendship that instant, by putting all your cards on the table, thus compelling his admiration for your downright candor and courage, in valiantly admitting your love for a man who has not as yet "asked for your hand."

Set Younger Man Straight About Brother's Status

And whether or not he beats his younger brother to the draw, in the matter of proposing, if you have been at any time rather "seriously sentimental" in relation to him,—either before or since meeting the lieutenant,—you had better get that fact off your chest and into the record with the latter, in the event he does ask to marry you. In accepting his proposal, you might broach the delicate subject somewhat in this fashion: "I don't want you ever to misunderstand about Dick and me. Before I met you, I had thought sometimes that I must be in love with him. But it was not until I met you that I realized I wasn't; and that what had really attracted me was his resemblance to you. I was looking for you all the time and didn't know it until I saw you; but then I knew! And I'm so grateful to Dick for leading me to you. Do you think we could find him some nice girl to marry?" Etc. And then don't worry about the possibility of Dick's mooning over the loss of you for the balance of his life. That would be a most conceited reflection, which would make you vaguely self-conscious regarding him, and all to no purpose. Take it for granted that just around some corner, soon to be turned, he will find the girl who will mean far more to him than you have meant,—even as you have found in Jim a vast improvement upon him, so far as your personal preference is concerned. M. H.

These Women! By d'Alessio

"She always has to have the last word!"

Oh, Those Uniforms . . .

By Anne Hagner

"There's something about a soldier . . ."

In fact, there must be plenty about a soldier—or sailor, or marine, or naval aviator, or R. A. F. pilot, or anything else in uniform—judging from the attitude of the feminine contigent.

And why do women, from Broadway to Podunk, go slightly berserk at the sight of a uniform, even after a year of war and two of Elective Service? Surely, they should be thoroughly conditioned to brass buttons by this time—but the luster dims not one whit.

What is the attraction? Is it a throw-back to the days when our standing Army was so small that a soldier could be regarded as the catch of the season? Or does milady see visions of Bunker Hill and the Battle of Manila Bay and Wake Island, all in one, when she sees a man in uniform?

We asked a lot of women what they thought.

"Pure eye attraction," observed a college senior. "Men look better, in the long run, because a uniform plays up their broad shoulders and narrow hips, if such exist. A lad who looks quite run-of-the-mill in his favorite glen plaid suit is transformed into a veritable Adonis when 'the Beard' calls him around to the nearest reception center. And a good-looking man is just twice as handsome in a uniform—particularly in that wonderful dark green that naval aviators wear!"

"Eye appeal isn't all!" a young career girl said firmly. "It helps a bit, naturally, but it's the romantic notion of serving ones' country that gives the glamour to the fighting boys. I think the ladies subconsciously like what the uniform stands for, not just the brass buttons themselves."

"Particularly among the Air Forces," agreed a nurse's aide. "At any gathering—Stage Door Canteen, party, or what have you—the fliers get most of the attention because girls love the thought of living dangerously, seeing unusual places, caring naught for the future and little for the past. When he wears a pair of silver wings he's rated high in anybody's book."

"That is because women—most of them—down deep inside would like to be doing those more or less dangerous jobs or, at least, prefer to imagine themselves doing them," a secretary observed sagely. "I enjoy talking to pilots and bombardiers and navigators because their work is precisely what I would do if I weren't chained to a desk—and had a lot more intestinal fortitude."

"Now, take the Marine Corps—and who wouldn't like to?" chuckled a Government employe (who sees few marines—tucked away there in the Pentagon Building). "You can't tell me that all the tradition of that outfit isn't the secret of its success with the ladies! The same lasses who used to swoon quietly in theaters when Clark Gable socked his leading lady on the jaw now go into the same routine when they read about a quartet of marines interrupting a bridge game long enough to knock out a Japanese landing party on a Pacific island.

"That's the attraction that surrounds even the lowliest private in the corps—though I must admit that the uniform doesn't hurt a bit. Even their hats have an extra dash of elan, and who ever saw a marine without a chest full of medals?"

"I believe you are right about that branch of the service, but that doesn't begin to cover the others," said a young civilian employe of the Naval Medical Center at Bethesda, Md. "In the Navy, I think it's the 'snob appeal'—most girls are more convinced of that than the Navy itself. There the uniform stands for John Paul Jones and 'We have only begun to fight' and the glitter of Annapolis."

"And no matter how patriotically one considers the situation, that glitter appeal is responsible for most of this accent on uniforms," said a medical student (femme). "It's the same appeal that is bound to crop up when a girl considers joining the WAACS or WAVES or SPARS, though naturally she is anxious to be of some use to her country."

"Oh, it isn't the uniforms that attract the gals," muttered a weary cynic: "It's just the fact that they are men."

The meeting adjourned.

The PRINCESS of GRATZEN

By LOUIS ARTHUR CUNNINGHAM

Synopsis

When Meridel, Princess of Gratzen, and her cousins, Rosine and Pol Martin, escape from Europe they seek thei uncle, Rudolph, Baron de Morpin. He is working as butler for Mme. Fabre-Lusignan at the Chateau Philibert. She befriended the young people and opens her estate to other refugee children. Her favorite nephew, Michel, who ran away to France three years before, suddenly appears at the chateau as a German soldier just escaped from a Canadian prison. He and his companion get away in Roger's car. Meridel had met Michel in Europe and fallen in love with him. Seeing him now in Nazi uniform she consents to marry his brother, Roger, of the Canadian Air Force. The next morning she and Roger hear over the radio that the escaped prisoners are still at large. In the midst of the Christmas festivities Roger is called to duty.

Chapter XXVI

Gradually, quiet descended on the great house as the laughter, the busy tongues were stilled by sleep. Rudolph, the incorrigible, went to the kitchen soon after dinner, to sit in the chair he loved, to talk gravely with Gesner and the cook and Florian and the other domestics, of wars and the aftermath of war, of his own experience in the army of France in the first World War. He spoke of the great generals of history, of the first great Churchill, Corporal John, Duke of Marlborough; of Prince Eugene, of Napoleon, Wellington and Blucher. He loved kitchens, did Rudolph, were they of castles, inns or cottages. He, who was "to the manner born," found his greatest ease and happiness in the inglenook.

Madame and Meridel shared the fire in the room upstairs. It had been a good day. The events of last night had not faded, any more than the wine stain on the taupe carpet. But the beauties of the day had taken some of the ugliness from them; the sweet and gentle spirit, the love that had pervaded the house had driven those dark shadows into hiding and both of them prayed, the old lady and the young girl in whose eyes the dreams refused to die, that they would not come again.

"You sent Roger away happy this time," said madame. "Never before have I seen him go so gaily, leave so much that he loved behind and depart singing. But it was so today. I think he must have taken something very precious away with him."

Meridel colored, looked at her hand that he had kissed. "Something very small, I think, madame. He asked for my love and I told him it was freely given."

The old lady looked at her shrewdly for a moment; then at the fire. She rubbed her chin on the gleaming knob of her stick. "Freely, yes," she said after a moment. "Sometimes, I know, it is not in our power to give as we should like to give."

"And is not that selfishness, madame?"

The thin shoulders shrugged. "Say, rather, it is human nature—a perverse, stubborn, sometimes hateful thing. Logic stops at human nature. Why do we do the things we do, hein? Why should we cause pain to those who love us most? Roger adores you, but you know what it is in love—one who loves, one who permits herself to be loved. It is like that in any match. There is no balance. One gives, the other takes. Oh, I have seen it often, often."

"You think it is like that with—with Roger and me?"

"Isn't it?"

"I—" she covered her face with her hands. "I do not know. Oh, he is so fine. He is what you call a noble knight. I am nothing. By accident of birth I was taught to consider myself something for a while. Not now. Where is my nobility compared with his, with that of so many thousands of men like him—kings, princes, knights—"

"Butchers, bakers, candlestick-makers," said madame. 'Every man, given a chance, can be a Bayard. If these wars prove nothing else they have shown that the heart of the peasant beats with the same stroke as the heart of a king. Well—but you are going to marry Roger Fabre?"

'I promised. When he returns, if he wants me still, I shall marry him."

"You could not do better," said madame smugly. "Nor could he. You have my blessing, both of you. It's too bad there was ever a sour note in this symphony of yours."

"That sour note——?"

"You heard it last night." The old lady's voice was harsh. "In this room. You know what I mean."

"I will not think of him."

"You can't forget him. No more can I."

"But I—I must forget him. You would not have me go on thinking of him after——"

"Can you help yourself?"

'Please, madame. you are merciless."

"I am a woman, and I am old."

"But——"

"And there it is. Being a woman I know what a man, one man, the map can do to your heart when you are young; being old, I will not deny it. The finest women have loved the greatest knaves who ever walked this earth."

"It is wrong to love like that."

"Mon Dieu! Who shall say what it is wrong to love? Not I, be assured of that, my little one."

But who is to tell me? Oh, I try not to think of him! It was only for a little while I know him——"

"A moment is long enough," murmured the Sibyl. "A portion of a moment. It is all done by a spark, I think. The fire is lighted from that spark. Sometimes, most often, in fact, the fire needs to be nursed and replenished; sometimes—and here I speak of great loves—the fire, untended and unfed except by dreams, burns on all through one's life."

"You mean I shall always—always remember him?"

"You will keep what you have of him," said madame gently. "That is woman's burden. To carry with her things that can only hurt her, burn her, bring her misery. But she cannot be rid of them and she is so made that I doubt she would rid herself of them if she could."

"Are we such poor things then, madame?"

"I'm afraid we are, my child."

"Then—then I cannot, because I made some lovely image of that one, ever hope to be worthy of the love that Roger offers me? I can never really be given to him because there is some part of me that he can never win?"

"No one can be given completely to another. It is a pity, but there is the truth of it. If you can make him happy, my dear, it will be enough."

"I will try. With all my heart."

"Then you cannot fail, Meridel."

The too-short holidays and the great feast of New Year's passed on into the steady merciless cold of the iron months of January and February. Life went on evenly enough at Philibert. Meridel and the children did not return to the city when vacation ended, and Rudolph spent most of his time at the great house that he had, from long pretense of ownership, come to look upon rather as the place where he belonged. Meridel stayed because madame needed her now and the children could have good schooling from Miss Carrick and the other teachers whom the government had provided.

Are These Feet Yours?

By Grace Martin

How do your feet cooperate when it comes to courtesy?

If there is an old lady in the group who is deaf and is hard to talk to, do your feet carry you closer for a little chat, that would make her happier? Or do they lead you over to the gay, noisy group to spend the evening?

When a friend is ill, do you stop at the hospital for a few minutes' visit?

If the girl next door, who is a little dull, seems stranded at a party, do your feet lead you over for one dance for friendliness' sake?

When your sister, whose husband is overseas, needs a visit to cheer her up, do your feet take you to her door—or prop themselves on a stool and take their ease all evening?

Little thoughtful courtesies can do a lot to make the other fellow's life brighter in times like these. Why don't you make your feet cooperate?

The Perfect Housekeeper

I

She—I never was so tired in all my life!

He—Why don't you sit down and rest?

She—How can I with all this cleaning to do?

He—Let it go! Let it go!

She—How can I let it go—and live in filth?

He—Well, get someone in to do it. I wouldn't wear myself out.

She—How can I get anyone? There's no one to get.

He—Then, by George, I'd let it go! I wouldn't make myself sick—and run a lot of doctor's bills just over a little dust.

She—It's not only dust—

He—Well, whatever it is I wouldn't take it so seriously. It'll be here when you're gone.

She—I suppose you're right . . .

He—Of course, I'm right! The trouble with women is that they wear themselves out over little things that don't matter.

She—But if I don't do them—

He—Nobody'll ever know the difference. It's nine-tenths in your imagination.

She—Well . . . maybe you're right . . .

II

He (calling from kitchen)—Mamie! What's become of all the glasses?

She—Look in the china closet.

He—I have. There's none there.

She—Aren't there some out by the sink?

He—There's a lot of dirty ones—IN the sink.

She—Oh yes. I had to let them go from last night. You see we used so many—with all those people here.

He—Well, where's a clean cup?

She—There ought to be one somewhere.

He—There are a lot of dirty ones—IN the sink.

She—Wait, I'll come and wash one.

He—Oh, never mind. I just wanted to get a drink, but I'll let it go.

She—Oh no, I'll come.

He—No, no . . . no, I don't want it now. I'll do without.

III

He (calling from bedroom)—Say, what's all this truck in the closet?

She—Oh, it's just some of the Christmas decorations and things.

He—Are they going to stay here?

She—Oh no, I just stuck them in there until I could store them away. You see I haven't felt like it—

He—I can't find my old gray trousers . . . or my golf shoes . . . or my sweater—and say, there's a lot of little gray fuzz on the floor!

She—I know. That closet needs cleaning but I've just had to let it go . . . I'll help you find your things.

He—Oh no, no! Not if you don't feel like it. I was going to get a little air but I'll stay in.

IV

He (calling from the bathroom)—What's the matter with the bathtub?

She—Nothing. Why?

He—It looks as if coal had been dumped in it.

She—I've just had to let it go for a couple of days. You know how quickly it gets dirty—especially if it's not cleaned after its used . . . Did you want to take a bath now?

He—Well, Ithought I might—

She—Why don't you use the shower?

He—Oh no, I'll just let it go.

He (calling from den)—Say, who's been in the den?

She—Why nobody but yourself. Why?

He—Oh nothing. Say, have we got any more ash trays?

She—What's the matter with the ones there?

He—They,re all full.

She—Oh, I meant to empty them, but I had to let them go.

He—What are all these papers on my desk?

She—A lot of it's mail. You know so many circulars came in the last week and they've all accumulated. I've had to let them go, too.

He—Have you got something to wipe this desk off with? The dust's a foot thick.

She—I'll get a dust cloth.

He—No! No! Don't bother on my account. I'll go to the basement and work on the car.

VI

He (calling from basement)—Mamie! Mamie! Come here!

She—Yes! Yes! What's the matter? . . . Oh, John! Are you hurt?

He—No, but I might have broken my neck. Who put all those old cans there at the foot of the steps?

She—I—I did. You see I save them for the tin and it takes so long to wash and squash them—

He—Well, what did you have to put them down here for?

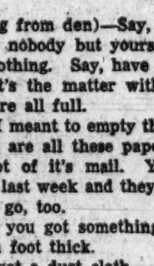
She—There wasn't room in the kitchen and so many accumulated over the holidays and then I didn't feel like fixing them and so I just let them go . . . But if you want to work on your car you can just push them to one side—

He—No, no. I'll just go down to the drug store and get some cigars.

Taking Care of Children With Rheumatic Fever

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Yesterday we discussed a condition that is likely to be very prevalent at this time of year—acute inflammatory rheumatism—and we pointed out that while cold and climate have a great deal to do with it, nutritional factors play a part in its prevention.



Dr. Clendening

At this time of year those who live in climates where this disease is likely to be more prevalent should take special precautions to see that the children are not exposed to colds and dampness.

One eminent authority says that poverty and not dampness is the predisposing factor. One argument in favor of this view is that the incidence of acute inflammatory rheumatism is lowest among pupils in private schools, next lowest in the rural schools and highest in the public schools all over the country.

Studies of families where acute inflammatory rheumatism has hit show that the average size family is this group consists of 7.5 persons per family. This indicates that persons in low income groups with large families have to spread the milk, butter, eggs, meat and fresh vegetables "too thin."

When acute inflammatory rheumatism has hit a child, the treatment consists of rest in bed, applications to the swollen joints, and the use of salicylic drugs of which aspirin is the most available.

The most serious feature about the infection is that it hits the heart worse than it does the joints and joint inflammation may disappear quickly, but the heart damage may be permanent. For this reason the experienced physician demands that a child who has had acute inflammatory rheumatism should be kept in bed for from six weeks to two months.

This is by no means an easy bit of advice to carry out, but it has been proved by careful observation that the children who have had this long period of restful convalescence have a very much smaller incidence of heart disease than those who are allowed to be up and about as soon as the fever has subsided.

Your Figure, Madame!

Weight Margin Is Health Reserve

By Ida Jean Kain

If you thin girls would only put on 5 to 10 pounds, you would be a lot less nervous and you wouldn't tire nearly so easily.

This time of the year the overweights go after their figure with a vim. Some of them fall by the wayside but at least they try. And altogether too many of you thin girls seem to be indifferent about your ultra-streamlines. You can't afford to be overweight. It will keep you from pulling your share in the war effort.

You can get those badly needed pounds just by paying a bit more attention to your food habits. And for proof, let me tell you about a young woman who weighed a mere 90 pounds—shoes, compact and all—for her height of five feet, one, who went on a diet and gained eight pounds in three short weeks.

She had never been particularly interested in food and had made no attempt to change her food habits. But with the extra strain of wartime, it developed that she was not only seriously underweight, but anemic.

Her doctor warned that she must gain. As she put it, "I have an old-fashioned doctor and he says I must put on 10 pounds right away." So she asked me to help her add the extra calories.

First of all, we had to coax her appetite along. When you have been eating helter-skelter for several years, you don't suddenly acquire an appetite just because you decide to gain weight. But the Vitamin B complex helped out. It stimulated a normal appetite. She took one capsule after breakfast, at the same time she took her iron concentrate.

Because she wasn't used to eating any breakfast, that was the meal she enjoyed the least. We had to concentrate these calories. The hot cereal was cooked in milk, chopped dates were added, and it was served with cream and sugar. Besides the cereal there were fruit juice and coffee—mostly hot milk. That was the starting-out breakfast. On the second morning, a slice of toast was added, on the third an egg, and finally, a second slice of hot buttered toast and strawberry jam. That's quite a breakfast. She didn't like that much food, but, like a good scout, she ate it all. And now she wouldn't miss a good morning meal for anything. It's just habit.

Lunch, which had always been a sandwich and a beverage, was changed to a real meal with a cream soup, a hot sandwich or other hot dish, a nourishing dessert and milk.

Dinner was the regulation meal. But calories were added in extra bread and butter and a cream dessert. Also, she had a green leafy vegetable every day and liver twice a week—those were for more vitamins and iron.

Before retiring, our gainer had a glass of hot milk with a malt preparation mixed in. It spoiled her appetite to eat between meals. But you may find you can't eat quite as much at mealtime and you may need milk or something else light in the mid-morning and afternoon and before retiring. If you have no icebox for keeping milk, buy one of the malt preparations that can be made with water. Another routine way of stepping up the calories is to have two slices of bread and butter with each meal.

Oh, yes! Our gainer had exercise in the fresh air every day, and got nine hours' sleep each night.

A gain of 8 pounds in three weeks is quite a record. You may not be able to take on curves that fast. But a change of food habits will gradually add weight and give you thin girls a feeling of well being you have never before experienced.

(Tomorrow—Measurement tests for all shapes and sizes.)

JUNIOR TAKES TO BUSINESS

By Amy Porter

New York, Jan. 5 (AP).—Until you've tasted the pain and pleasure of profit and loss, you can't understand the American system of business.

Some 5000 boys and girls, aged 16 to 21, are beginning to understand.

Organized into 300 independent, self-sustaining companies, these young people engage in honest-to-goodness business, and win or lose the money they risk.

They select a product to manufacture, they float stock to get money for equipment, they rent space, they pay themselves for labor, they advertise and sell their products. Once a year they declare stock dividends, or assess stockholders to cover losses.

All this they do under the guidance of Junior Achievement, an organization of top-flight business men formed for the purpose of initiating youngsters into the mysteries of free enterprise.

The results, especially since the war began, are pretty astounding.

The Sesame Company, girls' junior achievement group in Pittsburgh, is enjoying spectacular success with its incendiary-bomb blanket. The girls invented the blanket themselves—no one of them takes credit for it—and after it was passed by the Bureau of Mines, they applied for a patent on it. Civilian Defense groups have ordered the blanket in quantity.

A boys' company, also in Pittsburgh, developed a baby incubator, which they sell with ease and speed at $15, about $50 less than other incubators.

Subcontracting

A boys' company in Cleveland landed a subcontract to make wooden spools used in radio parts for the Navy.

The Red Cross has ordered 1000 sets of splints, at $1.50 a set from the Tor-Cra-Co., boys' group in Torrington, Conn.

The War Manpower Commission buys junior achievement-produced model engineering equipment and uses it for training within industry.

Several companies produce model planes for use in Army Air Corps flight training, and model houses for real estate companies.

It's not all war in junior achievement. Many companies make handcraft items—book-ends, plastic jewelry, knitting bags, paper weights, candle sticks, ash trays.

A Chicago group produces a radio prgoram about civilian defense news; a Harlem group sells the services of its colored musicians; a girls' group in Middletown, Ohio, sells dolls and other toys through local stores.

Failures are few. They happen occasionally when the board of directors has permitted the purchase of too-expensive equipment. Usually sale of excess equipment and stern reorganization saves the day.

The businessmen sponsors of junior achievement, headed by Charles R. Hook, president of the American Rolling Mill Co., are pleased not so much at the financial success of their proteges as at the business lessons young America is learning.

Big Business

For junior achievement is big business scaled down to fit the spare time and spare cash of teen-agers.

A company's initial capitalization is from $25 to $100, with shares selling at 25 cents or 50 cents, and no more than five shares to a customer.

All the company's officers are at the same time stockholders, members of the board of directors, and laborers.

Working hours are from 7:30 to 10 p. m., one night a week, and stock dividends may be anywhere from one penny to two pennies a share.

Each phase of the company's activities is guided by an adviser provided by Junior Achievement—and these advisers include skilled industrial designers, experienced salesmen, certified public accountants.

"We think Junior Achievement gives these youngsters an invaluable all-over view of business problems," says Mr. Hook. "We believe it teaches them, as nothing else could, why it is important for labor, capital and management to pull together."

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

Many a mother looks at the doubled up, apparently crooked legs of her tiny infant and imagines these to be bowlegs. She must recognize that all infants, due to their position before birth, have legs which, during the first months do not straighten out easily. They fold back against the body when the baby is in repose.

This is far different from the bowlegs which develop as a result of rickets. Rickets is a disease of malnutrition which specifically shows up in the development of the bone and tooth structure of the body. These structures demand minerals from the diet.

For the best utilization of these minerals the body needs vitamin D which is present in foods of a proper diet and may be obtained in concentrated form in deep sea fish liver oils. Lack of food minerals and lack of vitamin D or a deficiency of either may leave the child's bones so soft that standing on them bends them out of shape. This is the type of bowlegs or knock-knees about which the mother legitimately may be worried.

Mrs. M. S. D. says her boy is 7 months old and weighs 21 pounds. "I have just had him to a doctor because his teeth were bothering him and the doctor says he has the beginning of rickets. His legs are bowed, but not as much as they were. The doctor found what he called a 'rosary' on his chest. The boy is so fat I imagine his bowlegs are natural.

"He is such a good baby and this is the first time I have had to take him to a doctor. He gets 4 cups of Grade A milk, 7 ounces of water and 7 tablespoons of maltose. He gets the yolk of an egg, his baby cereal and a vegetable and fruit at the 2 p. m. meal. He takes cereal with the night bottle. He takes 25 drops of concentrated oil. He doesn't care for fruit juices. Is there something missing in his diet? Should he have more orange juice? I am worried sick about him."

When you say his legs aren't as bowed as before I think you are referring to the position described first. The beading of the ends of the ribs called a "rosary" indicates some degree of rickets and I'd take the baby to the doctor monthly and let him watch the progress of his vitamin D dosages.

The Work of Color Lens Guides Airmen

Ivan Dmitri, Color Photographer, On New Assignment At War Department

His Camera Helps Chart Course for Pilots to Follow

By Elizabeth Henney

It's a new angle on war, color photos as maps for air pilots, that has brought to Washington (and into uniform) that well-known color photographer and etcher, Ivan Dmitri, who reported to the War Department here for his newest assignment yesterday.

Just back from a job in the far-frozen north, war correspondent Dmitri's work these days is another indication of the streamlined course of the present war.

For these days, the pilots to the secret air bases chart their course, not by maps as in the olden times, but by color photos of their routes. And Dmitri is the man who makes those photographs. It works something like this. Once the base is determined, a pilot flies Dmitri along the route. He takes pictures of certain points, say, a smashed hull of a boat on the shore line or a distinctive clump of trees, or something else.

His Real Name Is Levon West

Then, before other pilots go out to that base, they are shown those photos projected on a screen; they learn that after seeing this certain point from the air (and the natural color photos make it unmistakable), they turn a certain direction and after a certain distance they should see this next view shown on the screen, and so forth. With that in their memory they guide their ships.

Home is where Dmitri hangs his hat these days, and though he has just arrived and hung it at the Mayflower he will be off again shortly for parts unknown. And how did he get into the business that led to this? That's a story in itself. In the first place he's not Ivan Dmitri at all, which leads to a great deal of confusion in the business of official identification and check-cashing in parts unknown. His real name is Levon West and he started life in South Dakota as the son of the Reverend and Mrs. A. Martin West.

And speaking of the Wests and the West, young Levon learned to love the wide open spaces, with the howling winds and the lonely prairies. He got to see quite a bit of it, too, as his family traveled from town to town, where his father answered "calls" in his capacity as a Congregational minister.

Became Interested In Airplanes

Young Levon had a hankering to be an arist right from the start, but father was very stern about the subject. He said he had no objection to his son doing anything he wanted provided he first took a business course. So Levon West eventually graduated from the University of Minnesota (a business course) and headed straight for New York.

There he studied etching from Joe Pennell. But since a struggling young etcher has to eat, he became publicity man for an aviation corporation. Then he became interested in designing planes. One day he heard that a new-type plane had come into the airfield piloted by a young man named Lindbergh. It was scheduled to take off shortly on an attempted Atlantic crossing, so young Levon West hastened down to sketch it.

Just as the plane took off he had a hunch. He went home and made an etching of the take-off. The rest is part of history. When the news broke, he took the etching to the New York Times. And the art gallery that had refused for two years to handle his etchings almost begged for that one. He sold 200 of them, and from then on was an etcher. Now a group of his etchings of "Man and the Elements" forms a collection in the Library of Congress.

It was the work on that set of "Man and the Elements" that brought on the protography and the name Ivan Dmitri. This etcher worked from life and many a frostbitten finger or ear resulted from hours spent sketching a blizzard or winter scene.

Finally a friend suggested quite practically that he get a camera, snap his scene from all angles and come back and sketch it from the comfort of a warm room. That seemed reasonable, so he bought a Leica, though $245 did seem an awful lot for such a little camera. However, it produced results which began to fascinate its owner.

A Double Life Can be Confusing

When the first Kodachrome color film was made, Eastman sent a couple of rolls of it to Levon West. He shot the whole first roll on different angles of a red racing car. One of those prints he sent to the Saturday Evening Post and they used it for their first color photo front page. Since then he has, of course, been constantly connected with the Saturday Evening Post, and his many color photos have enlivened their pages for years.

It was about this time that he received a contract from the Grace Lines to make a color-photographic trip through South America. Realizing that he was beginning to branch into a new field and that the art world would "look down their noses" at an artist gone commercial, he decided he needed a new name.

So—o—o, one evening when his studio was full of Russians, he announced that they had to help him name a new photographer. They did, and that's when Ivan Dmitri was born, though it isn't recorded whether the new photographer was christened in vodka.

It was all right until he got into "service" and started moving around at a great rate. In New York they had gotten used to cashing checks that read Ivan Dmitri (Levon West), but in odd corners of the world they're a bit skeptical about that sort of signature, and in the War Department he is now filed under "W" as well as "D" and the resulting confusion is terrific. And the moral of all this is—If you're going to lead a double life, don't get famous under both names. It's too hard on the public.

Many Weddings Take Place And Dates Set for Others

In one of the first all-military weddings of the year, Capt. Marjorie Dawson Fling, Director of Administration for the WAAC, and Col. A. Heath Onthank, of the office of the General Staff, United States Army, were married on New Year's Day.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred L. Dawson and was graduated from the Officers Training School at Fort Des Moines with the first class. Their marriage took place at 3 o'clock in the Unitarian Church in the presence of the immediate families and a few close friends.

Fanny Baldwin Rumored To Be Engaged to Wed

It's not official yet but sometime in April look for an engagement announcement by Representative and Mrs. Joseph C. Baldwin of their daughter, Miss Fanny Baldwin, and Wallace T. Foote of New York.

Miss Baldwin confided as much to her friends at a New Year's Eve party at El Morocco in New York, revealing at the same time a beautiful new ring—sapphires and diamonds in a diamond-shaped setting, worn on the correct finger.

Presented to society in New York November 19, which was her birthday anniversary, Miss Baldwin has been spending her debutante season between Washington, where she works in her father's office, and New York, where she stays at the Pierre.

Doris Burley Engaged to C. G. Maxwell

Of interest to Washington is the announcement of the engagement of Miss Doris Louise Burley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Vance Burley of St. Louis, Mo., formerly of New York, to Lieut. Charles Gilman Maxwell, U. S. A., son of Mrs. Herbert D. Maxwell of Boothbay Harbor, Me., and the late Mr. Maxwell.

Miss Burley's family is well known here. The bride-to-be was graduated from the Low-Heywood School, Stamford, Conn., and from Barnard College.

New Mexican Envoy Visits Home Before Kuibyshev

Washington Bemoans Imminent Departure of Popular Diplomat—Mexico's New Envoy to Soviet Union

In a city where "nothing is so constant as change," it would seem the imminent departure of another diplomat would create no more than a ripple of interest on the shifting scene.

But Dr. Luis Quintanilla, retiring Minister-Counselor of the Mexican Embassy, is not "just another diplomat," and formal announcement of his appointment as his country's first Minister to the Soviet Union has brought forth loud wailing and gnashing of teeth all over town.

Dr. Quintanilla

Not that the news came as a surprise. Rumors of the change rippled over Washington teacups some time ago. "I have had no formal notification," said Dr. Quintanilla, in keeping with the usual pattern observed by diplomats. "I can say nothing."

To friends privately, however, he let it be known that the rumor would be fact within a short time; that he was loathe to leave his many friends in Washington, but looked forward to his new assignment with keen interest. Then he changed the subject; talked about his new book, "A Latin American Speaks" (which, incidentally, was published just yesterday), and then lauched into a lively discussion of one of his pet subjects, inter-American relations and America's international role—both of which are expounded at length in the new tome.

Truth of the matter is that anybody in Washington is glad to listen to anything Quintanilla has to say about inter-American relations. A good neighbor who never fails to practice what he preaches, he has made a host of friends here—not only in diplomatic circles but throughout the town and the Nation. He has lectured before numerous groups; taught classes in Spanish and French at George Washington University for several years; managed to find time to write two books of poems, several plays, and a number of magazine articles. "Indefatigable" is the word for him.

Now in Mexico with his wife, Dr. Quintanilla is expected to return to Washington the middle of the month and will be off to Moscow shortly thereafter. Whether his wife and family—he has a 16-year-old daughter, Jane, and a 10-year-old son, Luis, jr.—will accompany him is not yet known; but chances are they'll stay in this country until the war is over.

Senora de Quintanilla

Senora de Quintanilla is the former Ruth Stallsmith, Pennsylvania-born, who met her husband when he was a student at Gettysburg and, being at that time enamored of a football player, she firmly withstood her Latin suitor's wooing for quite a long time—so he declares to this day.

As a diplomatic hostess, Señora de Quintanilla has lived in a number of countries, but she looks back with special pleasure to those four years in Paris, her husband's birthplace. It was there, incidentally, during his tour of diplomatic duty that he attended the Sorbonne, received a couple of degrees and was decorated with the Legion d'Honneur.

Back to Washington in 1935 as Counselor of the Embassy, he hit the headlines a short time afterward with the publication of his book, "The Other Side of the Mexican Church Question." It raised a storm of protest, but brought him plenty of publicity. This new Mexican counselor is a man to watch, was what any number of Washingtonians said, in effect, at that time. They've been watching him with increasing admiration ever since; weren't one whit surprised when the announcement came in 1938 that he had found time from his arduous duties to earn a doctorate in philosophy from Johns Hopkins University; took it as a matter of course when his position was stepped up from that of Counselor to Minister-Counselor; and, when in due time he was appointed to his newest post, that, too, seemed entirely in keeping with the pattern of progress that has characterized Quintanilla's career since at the age of 21 he was appointed to his first diplomatic job in the protocol division in Mexico City.

Around town they're saying:

That a number of Joe Casey's friends are pulling hard to get him appointed Secretary of Labor . . . and that the choice would be ideal. . .

Joseph Casey

That Harold L. Ickes' forthcoming book, "The Autobiography of a Curmudgeon," will be a sell-out before it reaches the stands in March. Only trouble is, there are too few people familiar with that word "curmudgeon." Webster's defines it as a miserly or churlish person."

That the resignation of James S. Knowlson from the WPB will take from the Washington scene one of the most efficient men who have come to the Capital for wartime work. Friends say, however, that in his connection with WPB on a consultant basis, he will still be here a good part of the time. "I'll be glad to get him back home," Mrs. Knowlson said yesterday. "When we came here, it was on a temporary status; and we always felt we'd be leaving just any time." They're keeping their apartment at Washington House, however, and one of their children is in school here; so chances are, the Knowlson family will continue to be here much of the time, even after the former $1-a-year man who was vice chairman of WPB returns to full-time duty with the Stewart-Warner Corp., Chicago. . . .

That Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who came to Washington several days ago, expressed the wish to see one thing here especially—a session of the Supreme Court. So, on Monday when the court opened for its 1943 round, Mrs. Vanderbilt was there to watch what went on. She accompanied Mrs. Stanley Reed; had a front-section seat, and apparently liked what she saw, and heard . . . even though the present court is predominently New Deal and the woman who has long considered "America's first hostess" still prides herself on her anti-New Deal leanings.

Miss Sara Lerch Is Bride of H. Fillebrown

Miss Sara Rosamond Lerch, president of the Columbian Women of George Washington University, was married at noon yesterday to Herbert M. Fillebrown of Daytona Beach, Fla., in an informal ceremony performed at the Covenant-First Presbyterian Church by Dr. Albert Joseph McCartney. The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Oliver B. Lerch.

The ceremony was performed in the presence of a small company of close relatives and friends of the bridal couple and was followed by a luncheon given in their honor by Mr. and Mrs. Oliver B. Lerch at the Mayflower Hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Fillebrown left later in the day for their home in Florida, stopping en route at Richmond, Charleston, S. C., and Savannah, Ga. They will be at home after February 1 at 815 North Oleander Avenue, Daytona Beach. They plan to spend their summers in Bass River, Hyannis, Mass., at Mr. Fillebrown's summer home.

The bride is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Felix A. Lerch of Mount Carmel, Pa.

Previous to her marriage Mrs. Fillebrown was employed in the Customs Bureau, United States Treasury Department, here. She is a graduate of the Kutztown State Teachers College, Kutztown, Pa., and of George Washington University, where she also received her master of arts degree.

Mrs. Fillebrown also holds a bachelor of laws degree from the Washington College of Law and is a member of the bar of the District of Columbia.

The bride is a member of the Phi Delta Gamma Sorority of George Washington University and has been active in the American Association of University Women here.

Mr. Fillebrown formerly resided in Pawtucket, R. I., where he was treasurer of the Anchor Webbing Co., operating mills in Pawtucket, Woonsocket and Valley Falls. He also was treasurer of the Thompson Brothers Shoe Co. of Brockton, Mass. He is a member of the board of trustees of the Virginia Union University at Richmond, a prominent member of the Rotary Club of Daytona Beach and active in Presbyterian Church circles there. His daughter, Mrs. R. F. Deibert, lives at Tilden Gardens here.

Guests at the wedding and luncheon included Mr. and Mrs. Hugh M. Thrift, Mrs. Blanche Rounds, Mrs. Frank C. Nickels, Miss Grace M. Kiefer, Miss Emily Bishop, Mrs. R. F. Deibert, Miss Lora Deibert, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver B. Lerch and their children, Oliver B. Lerch, jr., and Christie Ann Lerch, all of Washington.

Miss Higginson To Become Bride

Mr. and Mrs. John Metcalfe Higginson announce the engagement of their daughter, Hylda Carpenter, to Ensign John Ladd, U. S. N. R., son of Mrs. William Palmer Ladd and the late Dean Ladd of the Berkeley Divinity School, New Haven, Conn.

Miss Higginson is a graduate of St. Anne's School in Charlottesville, Va., and the prospective bridegroom received his degree from Choate School, Harvard University, and the University of Virginia.

Harold Smith Guest of Honor

Harold D. Smith, Director of the Budget, was the guest in whose honor Col. H. M. Waite and Col. E. W. Clark, consultants in the War Projects Unit of the Bureau of the Budget, entertained at luncheon yesterday in the Pan American Room of the Mayflower.

Other guests were members of the unit's engineering staff in Washington for their annual meeting.

'Ice-Capades' Bond Drive Off to a Soaring Start

Sales Already Near Quarter-Million Mark; Pat Rooney to Boost Membership Tea; Items of News and Gossip of the Theater

THE CAMPAIGN being jointly sponsored by the Washington Variety Club and Radio Station WRC, whereby purchasers of war bonds will receive free tickets to the opening performance of "Ice-Capades of 1943" in Uline's Arena on Tuesday night, January 19, seems to be off to a flying start.

MAX GORDON

Monday, opening day of the bond sale, rang up a total of $185,000, and a late check yesterday showed a total well in excess of $200,000 already on the books. Twelve bonds of $1000 face value were rung up on the cash register the first day of the sale, with many others of the higher denominations moving across the counter at the WRC booth at Fourteenth Street and New York Avenue. Sales also are going forward nicely at the Capitol, Earle and RKO-Keith's theaters.

The most desirable seat locations, in all justice, are being allotted to the larger purchasers—as was done in the case of the similar bond premiere of "The War Against Mrs. Hadley" at the Capitol not so long ago—but the purchase of a $25 bond is sufficient to insure the delivery of two tickets for the opening night of this glittering spectacle on skates.

Since the engagement of the "Ice-Capades" will extend from January 19 to February 2, and the bond drive involves only the opening performance, it seems worth noting that tickets for all regular performances after the night of January 19 are available at Uline's Arena, the Sport Center, Eighth and D Streets, Fairway Sporting Goods Co., 1328 G Street, and at the Willard and Shoreham Hotels. The inaugural festivities, however, will be well worth the price of a bond, no matter how high the denomination.

Playtime at the Op'ry House

The whistle-stoppers were out in force again at the National Theater Monday night. After the orchestra had sounded the "Star Spangled Banner" and the regularly scheduled overture for the 8:40 curtain on "This Little Hand" and nothing further happened, that old, gallery-god handclapping and whistling that hasn't been heard on E Street in years set up its clamor, reminiscent of the old, hometown "op'ry house" on road show night. So the orchestra struck up again. And stopped again. So the racket broke out again. Around 9 o'clock the curtain hoisted itself and all was well. What the audience evidently didn't know was that in a moment of wartime preoccupation the railroads had shipped the production from Baltimore back to Jersey, instead of over the 40-mile short-haul to Washington, and the settings and props didn't arrive at the theater until almost time for the doors to open for the first performance. So what? So it was a short show, anyhow, and worth waiting for—especially to the accompaniment of that nostalgic, upstairs impatience.

Incidentally, A. H. Woods' return to the theater after five years attracted its full quota of well-wishers from out of town. Prominent in the first-night audience was Producer Max Gordon, beaming over the Broadway reception of "The Dough Girls"—sure-fire even in its Washington first week—and all steamed up over the excellence of the Woods cast, with a few extra adjectives for Barbara Bel Geddes in particular. Also present, in tow of Mr. and Mrs. Sam A. Galanty, Frank La Falce, et al., was Nate B. Spingold, high executive and member of the board of Columbia Pictures.

Pat Rooney Lends a Hand

Pat Rooney, veteran and beloved dancer and comedian, currently lending luster to Col. James Jeremiah Lake's "Gay Nineties" night spot, will be honor guest today at a membership tea given in the home of Mrs. Benjamin Brill by the Washington City of Hope Auxiliary of the Los Angeles Sanatorium, under the general chairmanship of Mrs. Carl W. Linker. The genial and kindly Rooney will be the center of interest of an expected group of some 150 engaged in a great humanitarian work.

Today, tomorrow and Friday, in his Bethesda and Hyattsville theaters, the alert Mr. Sidney B. Lust will be presenting a composite reel of the highlights of all the New Year's "bowl" games, marking the final climax of the football season. With a sharp eye for the main event, Sid presented this special celluloid symposium as a part of the entertainment at last night's Touchdown Club banquet. They liked it.

Katina Paxinou, who plays the part of Pilar in Hemingway's "For Whom the Bell Tolls," is expected to make her second film appearance in an important role in Paramount's picturization of Daphne DuMaurier's best seller, "Frenchman's Creek," costarring Joan Fontaine and Arturo de Cordova, handsome Mexican actor new to American audiences. Mme. Paxinou, most famous actress in Greece and frequently starred on the London stage, had a new Paramount contract pushed under her pen directly the company executives had viewed a three-hour, rough cut of the "Bell." Or has the on-the-spot Miss Hopper already said that?

When that greeting card came along from the Coast from one H. P. Vallee, I couldn't for a minute identify the sender—except for the uniformed likeness of the bandmaster and his Coast Guard Band pictured on the reverse side. Then it occurred to me that Rudy's real name is Hubert Prior Vallee. And try to make "Rudy" out of that!

HEDDA HOPPER

Mr. Hawks Flying High!

Hollywood, Calif., Jan. 5.—Howard Hawk's picture, "Air Force," I'm told, will set a new high in air pictures. Howard has three goodies lined up. When he finishes producing "Corvettes in Action" (otherwise known as "The Bucking Broncos of the Sea") he has two pictures for Gary Cooper—the life of Eddie Rickenbacker, and another which hasn't yet been named.

NELSON EDDY

Even though Howard owns half of Jane Russell's contract, he won't use her in "Corvettes." Why waste a gal like that in a man's picture? She's being saved for bigger and better things.

Nelson Eddy's fans can stop weeping. He's just signed to do "The Phantom of the Opera" for Universal. Florence George is up for the prima donna part opposite him, and Martha Eggerth already has signed for one of the roles.

Kathryn Grayson's next is "The Merry Widow Goes West," a comedy laid in 1880. Joe Pasternak should do right well with the idea.

A couple of vaudeville actors, who know an awful lot about hoofing but not about horses who've got them, get the gold fever, rush West—sure, you're ahead of me!—wind up with the girl and a fortune.

Can you beat the luck of Brynie Foy, who had the story of the Touhy gang ready for production? So what? So J. Edgar Hoover and the FBI gang just made a finish for it. Brynie's the kind of guy who if he fell down in a sewer, would come up with a gold watch.

The business "Arabian Nights" is doing has even surprised Walter Wanger. But all you have to do is read the title—you know it's complete escape from bombs, gangs, war.

You can begin saving pennies for Ginger Rogers. It's a cinch she'll soon be on the street corner with a tin cup. After she's paid her Federal tax this year, her State tax amounts to more than the $25,000 the Government allows her to keep.

If she does "This Is the Army," it will be for free. And she has three pictures lined up for 1943—which means again she'll be working for nothing.

Sitting in his living room the other night, Alan Ladd heard fire engines whizzing by, went out to find where it was. Just then a fireman came up to him and said, "We hear there's a fire in Alan Ladd's house. Where is it?" Sure enough, his own chimney was ablaze.

Over the holidays Lionel Barrymore entertained a guest—old-fashioned flu. Instead of locking himself in his room, he scattered germs all over the piano, and wound up with a new composition.

Last summer he orchestrated some of MacDowell's famous songs. They were played at the Indianapolis festival.

Fred Astaire tells me little 17-year-old Joan Leslie is one of the quickest girls he's ever worked with. They started a dance routine and after Fred put her through it a couple of times she said, "Do you mind if I go off in a corner and write this down?" Then they worked on it a couple of hours, and next day she had completely memorized the whole routine.

Maria Palmer, Viennese actress who played in "The Moon Is Down" on Broadway, has one of the leading roles in "Mission to Moscow." I hear Churchill may be done by a San Francisco lawyer, who looks exactly like him.

Times Square Squibs

New York, Jan. 5.

Commodore Harold S. Vanderbilt—the noted yachtsman, financier, railroad official and creator of contract bridge—was playing bridge at the Cavendish Club with George S. Kaufman . . . "Times are getting tough," Commodore Vanderbilt sighed. "Times are so tough that I now have to live on my income" . . . "Live on your income?" Kaufman repeated. "What've you been living on up until now?" . . . "Until now," said Vanderbilt, "I've been able to live on the income of my income."

Albert D. Lasker, who retired recently from business, will work with Henry J. Kaiser in some maritime charities . . . Alfred Hitchcock's next film, now that his "Shadow of a Doubt" has been completed, will be the movie adaptation of the best-seller, "The Rafi" . . . The longest New Year's greeting was a 27-page cablegram Richard Wright received from Vladimir Yermilow, the Moscow literary critic and expert on Dostoievsky. It was a message of congratulation to Wright for having written "Native Son." It was 1387 words long.

Robert Donat, the British movie star, has been working in the title role of the film biography, "William Pitt" . . . Last month, during a respite from the studio, Donat walked through London's Mayfair . . . He came to Hanover Square, looked up and saw the famed statue of William Pitt . . . "Well, I'll be damned," sighed Donat. "It doesn't look a bit like me."

"I laughed when I read your story about Ernie Burnett, and not me, having written 'Melancholy Baby,' and about my having told the girls in Fort Worth that I wrote it," writes Bill Morrissey. "Here are the facts: Years ago, at the Mozart Cafe in Denver, we were all seated around the piano. Ernie Burnett was fooling around with a tune, and I with a singer who was short on voice but long on looks. Ernie finally got the melody. I finally got the girl—and called her My Melancholy Baby. I married her—Dolly Hackett. A Denver taxi-driver with a violine wrote and played the lead-sheet. His name was Paul Whiteman . . . Who wrote what lyrics? Who remembers? But the song lasted longer with me than the girl did."

Salvator Dali, the surrealist painter, arrived in Hollywood with a letter of introduction to Harpo Marx. Dali brought with him a harp, covered with silver spoons, and presented it to Harpo . . . Later that evening, the shrewd artist suggested. "I would like to paint you, Mr. Marx" . . . "Sure, fine," Harpo agreed . . . "My price," Dali reminded, "is $3000 for a painting" . . . "Not from me," Harpo assured him. "I never pay more than a buck for a picture" . . . Dali painted the portrait—showing Harpo with a liver on his forehead. And Marx paid less than a buck for it. He paid nothing.

The story now making the rounds is of the Papa Kangaroo who went for a stroll with Mama Kangaroo and their baby. The Baby Kangaroo kept jumping out of his mother's pouch, then back in again, out again, in again, etc. Papa Kangaroo finally became exasperated and said to his wife: "I can't stand these jackrabbit antics. I'm going to spank him" . . . "It's not the poor dear's fault," Mama Kangaroo explained. "It's just that I've got hiccoughs."

A young Hollywood prize fighter was hired by a group of eminent Hollywood producers to teach them how to box. He'd begin in the morning, each day, visiting each of the producers and sparring a few rounds—without touching them . . . The fighter stayed up late one night and at 8 a. m. he was in no mood to start giving boxing lessons all morning long. He therefore disposed of his chores quickly by "accidentally" flattening his clients within the first minute. That's why, one sunny morning in Hollywood, Ernest Lubitsch, Walter Wanger and Louis B. Mayer were kayoed.

'Green Cockatoo' at King-Smith

A blotchy hue and a raucous voice are the characteristics which mark "The Green Cockatoo," Arthur Schnitzler's famed comedy of the French Revolution, as presented by the aspiring students of the King-Smith Playhouse.

Never renowned for his clearness, strength or optimism, Schnitzler's fantastic, sometimes allegorical, play paints a depressing picture of the people's fight against the slavery imposed upon them by the French monarchy. The line of demarcation between the aristocrat and the citizen is drawn so finely that one is occasioned to wonder, as a contemporary humorist recently put it, just who won the revolution.

In the wine rooms of Prospere, fermerly a theater manager, gather the unemployed actors of Paris to speak their improvised pieces before the amused royalty of a decadent society. All of that which takes place is mingled with the reality of what is going on in the streets just above, so that the spectator, both on the stage and in the audience, is left to draw from the lines whatever he will, or can.

At the first directorial endeavor of Ewald Schindler at the Playhouse, "The Green Cockatoo" represents an undertaking of overwhelming ambition. A difficult enough job for more experienced actors, the play completely lacked cohesion in the hands of the embryonic performers. In these days of manpower deficiency, it is a tribute to the director that the play reached the boards at all.

The only professional touch came from an intermezzo dance interpretation by Elizabeth Halpern, which featured David Campbell and the choreographer, herself.

Worthy of mention in the cast were Alfred Loritsch, as Prospere, and Albert Sigafoose, as Henri, the tragedian of the troupe. Injured prior to the Monday night opening, Gilbert Mendelsohn played on as Grasset and was supplanted last night by Cae Johnston, who also doubled in another role.

The unique setting was designed by Alfred Kastner and the colorful costuming created by Charlotte Trowbridge.

Savoyards' Return, Hit Films Feature New Bills

"RUDDIGORE," an infrequently performed Gilbert and Sullivan satire, is added to the repertoire of the Boston Comic Opera Company as they return to the National Theater for one week. Opens Monday.

"ROAD TO MOROCCO." That traveling trio composed of Bing Crosby, Bob Hope and Dorothy Lamour hit the road once more in quest of laughs and music. Bing sells pal Hope to an Oriental and then tries to unsell him when he learns that the buyer is the rich and svelte Miss Lamour. Rufe Davis of the barnyard imitations and twanging guitar, heads the new stage show. This follows the current engagement of "George Washington Slept Here."

Capitol

Jervis, Guard For President, Succumbs

Richard L. Jervis, 67, head of the White House Secret Service detail for 26 years, who kept the private lives of seven Presidents behind close lips, died Monday night of pneumonia in San Diego, Calif.

JERVIS

A Secret Service operative for 14 years and one of the world's most important — but least self-advertised — detectives, "Dick" Jervis guarded the lives of Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft, Woodrow Wilson, Warren G. Harding, Calvin Coolidge, Herbert Hoover and Franklin D. Roosevelt. On August 31, 1941, he was retired, knowing them all, but refusing to exploit his knowledge under intensive offers.

But he summed them up once, in a thumbnail sketch:

Franklin D. Roosevelt: "The happiest, gayest disposition of them all."

Herbert Hoover: "He was perhaps the most studious. He charted with a blueprint." But he had a warmth, too, Mr. Jervis said, relating how Hoover shopped personally for Christmas presents for his grandchildren.

Calvin Coolidge: "Strangely enough, he had the greatest sense of humor."

Warren G. Harding: "He has been cruelly slandered. He was a good man."

Woodrow Wilson: "He was the most regal of all. He made Kings look like commoners."

Taft: "He was the greatest traveler of all the Presidents.'

Theodore Roosevelt: "He loved a good, clean fight. He was truly a great American."

Mr. Jervis knew.

He played golf with Presidents Taft, Wilson and Harding. In 193 he was outside the San Francisco hotel door when the cries came from Mrs. Harding and the President died. Twice he strolled Paris streets with Wilson in the growing shadows of the peace meetings. Behind him, then, were Nation-wide tours with Taft. He went fishing with Coolidge and to the West Indies with Hooover. He was on the ship which carried President Roosevelt to Hawaii. He slept in Buckingham Palace.

Afterwards, as a good talker, he could carry on for hours, but wouldn't mention the White House. It was that way when people tried to buy his recollections.

Born in Delphos, Ohio, he entered the Secret Service in 1907 and spent some of his career in field stations. The funeral arrangements were not known here yesterday. The Secret Service said that surviving is a sister, Mrs. John S. Ferguson of San Diego.

Touhy Bases Plea on 2d Childhood

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 5.—Roger Touhy's lawyer, quoting the Bible, argued today that the gangster's 99-year prison term would take him into his second childhood and declared, since it was illegal to imprison an infant, "Touhy the Terrible" should be turned loose.

The argument was one of several produced by Joseph Harrington, colorful one-armed attorney, in an amended petition for a writ of habeas corpus to free Touhy from Stateville Prison, from which he escaped October 9 and to which he was returned December 31 after capture by FBI agents.

Harrington, in the petition filed before the heavily manacled and guarded Touhy was brought into the packed courtroom, declared the Bible set the normal life of man at "three score and ten" years. Touhy, who is 44, has served only 9 of the 99 years imposed on him for the kidnaping of John (Jake the Barber) Factor. His lawyer contended that after Touhy had reached 70 he would go into his second childhood and will be an illegally imprisoned infant.

Rufino Ramos' Funeral Rites Set for Tomorrow

Funeral services for Rufino Ramos, 47, structural engineer with the public buildings branch of the Public Works Agency, will be held at 3 p. m. tomorrow at Hines funeral home, 2901 Fourteenth Street Northwest. Burial will be in Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

Mr. Ramos, who had been in Government service more than 15 years, died Monday at his home, 66 New York Avenue Northwest, after a long illness. Born in the Philippine Islands, he came to this country in 1919. He received his bachelor's degree in engineering from the University of Nebraska and his master's degree from the University of Wisconsin the following year.

Before coming to Washington in 1926, Mr. Ramos was employed by the State of Nebraska at Lincoln.

His wife, Mrs. Lydia Ramos, survives; his mother, two sisters and three brothers, when last heard from were still living in Cayagan, Oriental Misamis Province in the Philippines.

Flier, Dropped In Snowdrift, Tells About It

By the Associated Press

Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Quebec, Jan. 5.—Harry Hanford Griffiths, 20-year-old Royal Air Force ferry command navigator, told in a military hospital here today how he said "goodby" to life when he fell through the emergency hatch of a Boston Bomber low ever nearby frozen Lake St. Louis on December 21.

"I screamed like hell," he recounted. The story had to be pried from him.

Except for some chapped knuckles, the result of frost bite, he bore no marks of his ordeal.

"I was making adjustments to the wind-drift instruments in my compartment," he said. "I was on my hands and knees and thinking of Christmas leave with my family in Toronto.

"Suddenly I plunged through the emergency hatch. I don't know what caused it to open. I might have tripped its lock with my foot. I made a wild grab and managed to catch hold of a slat which crosses my instrument.

"I held on for dear life, half in and half out of the plane. I screamed like hell over the roar of the motors to draw the attention of the pilot and tried hard to pull myself back into the plane. I saw the plane dropping and figured the pilot realized what had happened.

"I looked down and saw the snowy ice surfaces coming toward me. My hands and arms were numb with cold and I knew I was losing my hold. So I let go and shot out of the hatch.

"I remember seeing the bomber shooting away from me, and I remember thinking I was about to die. I said to myself 'Goodby.' I don't remember anything else until the next afternoon when my brother talked to me in the hospital here."

Griffiths had no recollection of picking himself up out of a snowdrift and of walking across the ice. Nor of meeting the farmer who warmed him and drove him to the hospital.

Sitting nearby and listening to Griffith's recital was Capt. Sid Gerow of Wayzata, Minn., who, when he saw his navigator's plight, had brought the fast plane down so dangerously close to the ground that his propeller cascaded snow.

"I let her drop as close to the snow-covered ice as I could," he said, "and stayed there until I had barely enough room to clear the trees on the shoreline, and then zoomed up."

Walker Dies; Served Tariff Board Here

Myron Reed Walker, 62, mining engineer and economist of the metals division of the United States Tariff Commission and prominent in District civic affairs, died yesterday at his home, 4501 Van Ness Street.

Mr. Walker came to Washington in 1923 as senior commodity specialist for the Tariff Commission's mining division and was a past president of the Glover Park Citizens Association. In 1937 he was one of the civic leaders honored in The Post's "Working for Washington" series.

Born in Wisconsin, Mr. Walker was educated at Colgate University and the Michigan College of Mines. Prior to coming to the Capital, he operated mines in various Latin American countries and served as consulting engineer on many important mining enterprises. He played an important part in the development of the mining district in the state of Oaxaca, Mexico.

Mr. Walker was a past president of the Washington section of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, and a life member of the national body.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Vitaline Walker; two daughters, Mrs. Delphine Reed and Mrs. Margaret Hunt, and a son, Robert L. Walker, of Philadelphia, Pa.

Funeral services will be conducted by the Rev. Gove Johnson at the Tabler funeral home, 4217 Ninth Street Northwest, at 11 a. m. Thursday. Burial will be in Rock Creek Cemetery.

1000 Reserve Places for G. O. P. Fete

A thousand reservations already have been received by the Women's National Republican Club for its twenty-second annual luncheon to be held January 16 at the Waldorf-Astoria to hear Joseph C. Grew, former Ambassador to Japan, and Mrs. Eugene Meyer, wife of the editor and pulisher of The Washington Post, Mrs. Ira A. Campbell, chairman of the luncheon committee, announced yesterday.

"Our War With Japan" will be the topic of Mr. Grew's speech, which will be broadcast over a Nation-wide network by the Columbia Broadcasting System.

Mrs. Meyer, who recently returned from England where she made a special study of social conditions and nursery care for children, will talk on "The Spirit of Great Britain Today," her speech to be broadcast by Station WMCA.

Mrs. William Henry Hays, president of the club, will preside at the luncheon which will celebrate the twenty-second birthday of this club which has grown from a membership of 508 at the time of its first meeting in 1921 to its present Nation-wide membership of 3500 women.

Sponsored by hundreds of prominent Republican women from all sections of the country, headed by the wives of four former Presidents of the United States—Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Mrs. Herbert Hoover, Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt and Mrs. William Howard Taft—the annual luncheon is generally attended by about 1500 Republican women and men from many States. Listen-in parties are held in many cities by groups of members who, unable to attend, arrange meetings to hear the speeches broadcast from the luncheon.

Mrs. Campbell and members of her luncheon committee are now accepting reservations at the club, 3 West Fifty-first Street. Mrs. Bruce Barton is vice chairman of the committee; Mrs. Walter Ewing Hope, treasurer, and working with them are Mrs. Percy P. Perkins, Mrs. George B. St. George, Miss Henrietta St. John, Miss Mary Gardner Smith and Miss Julia E. Strauss.

Doings of the Day

Celebrating its forty-fourth birthday, Manor House Chapter, D. A. R., will meet at 8 p. m. at the chapter house. Mrs. Ruth Franklin, State chairman of the Girls Homemakers' Committee, will speak. "Sidelights on Alcohol" will be discussed at a meeting of Chapin W. C. T. U., to be held at 12:30 p. m. at the home of Mrs. Everett Eaton, 3609 Livingston Street, Chevy Chase, D. C. Plans for the "Quiz and Consequence Night" to be held Sunday, January 24, will be made at a meeting of the Washington Chapter of Junior Council to be held at 8:30 p. m. at the Jewish Community Center. Members of the Women's City Club will meet at 8 p. m. at the clubhouse for a business session.

Argentina Strongly Pro-Democratic in Ideals One of Its Noted Women Economists Says

By Genevieve Reynolds
The Post Club Editor

GENEVIEVE REYNOLDS

Contrary to general belief in the United States, the Argentine people are predominantly pro-democratic in ideals. So declared alert Senorita Susana Larguia of Buenos Aires.

A business woman, economist, lecturer and writer, the titian haired senorita, who has just returned from a one-year stay in her country, said:

"The majority of our people prefer that Argentina take more definite steps toward open collaboration with the United Nations."

She told of the increasingly friendly feeling toward the United States that is growing deeper and deeper.

In reality the Argentine people always have been democratic in ideals but now more than ever, according to Senorita Larguia.

"Now you will find the women making a tremendous effort to preserve the democratic way of life," she averred. "Women in unions, textile trades and, in fact, all walks of life are making a tremendous drive, not only to improve working conditions but to further the democratic way of life. These are working in conjunction with civic and cultural organizations."

Teacher's Work Stressed

Specifically, she pointed out that the elementary teachers—all women—are putting more and more emphasis on democracy in their classroom instruction. In addition, women banded together in various organizations are laboring unceasingly to promote better understanding and relations between their homeland and the United States.

For example, Senorita Larguia explained that the Union Argentina Mujeres, of which she is a member, not only is promoting the civil and political rights of women but doing an excellent job at furthering inter-American relations.

She referred also to the Union Federal, composed of both men and working women, that is pioneering by trying to develop closer relations with Chile, Paraguay, Uruguay, Bolivia—Argentina's neighbors. Great emphasis is placed also on better inter-American relations.

Need Wide Exchange

While Senorita Larguia thinks that the basic steps toward better understanding between the Argentines and the North Americans have been taken, such as the exchange of cultural ideas, she made it clear that more should be done along that line.

"We need a wide exchange of ideas and ideals between South American and North American women," she averred.

"This exchange should include technical, scientific, commercial and economic ideas and last but not least—the personal relations—real feeling and affectionate understanding."

Last year, after returning to Buenos Aires from a two years' stay in the United States, Senorita Larguia gave a series of lectures in Colegio Libre de Estudois Superiores on "The American Labor Movement." Also, she toured the country urging closer cooperation with the United States. Between times she wrote for magazines and newspapers.

By the way, she confided to me that she hoped to become a member of the American Newspaper Women's Club. Only recently, she became a publisher. She is the only woman member founder and organizer of a new publishing company in Buenos Aires. The company will specialize in the publication of art books, dealing with artists, their works and lives.

Father Is Physician

Emphasizing the works of South Americans now, later she expects to include North American art. First of its kind in Latin America, the publishing company, by bringing out the works of both the United States and Latin-American artists, hopes to jump the hurdle of artistic misunderstanding. At least that is the way Senorita Larguia expresses it.

SENORITA SUSANA LARGUIA

Versatile, Senorita Larguia explained that her father—an outstanding physician—encouraged her to develop wide interest and an acute business sense. That was when I expressed amazement at a Latin-American businesswoman. Then she pointed out that she wasn't the only Argentine woman in business. "There are many," she said. "You just don't have the opportunity to meet them."

Educated by private tutors exclusively, she has traveled throughout Europe many times and knows especially well France and Italy. Moreover, she has a thorough knowledge of the United States, has traveled in all sections, expresses great love for it.

Leahy, Lady Dill to Address D. A. R. Defense Committee

Lady Dill, wife of Sir John Dill, British Army Field Marshal, and William E. Leahy, director of the Selective Service, D. C., will speak at a meeting of the District National Defense Committee, D. A. R., to be held at 11 a. m. Friday at the Chapter House.

Lady Dill, an officer in England's Motor Transport Corps, joined with a unit of volunteer women drivers at Mount Faucon working for a field hospital attached to General Huntziger, Second Army Corps in the Meuse-Argonne area. She was in the Battle of France, escaped to Bordeaux and set out for England in a sardine boat. A British cruiser rescued the party.

Mr. Leahy will discuss the relationship of the 18-19-year-old draft to good citizenship in developing the privileges and responsibilities of being an American.

During January, a group spokesman announced, the D. A. R.'s are presenting Good Citizenship medals to outstanding graduates of junior and senior high schools. Mrs. Pearl M. Shaffer, vice president of the National Defense Committee, who is in charge of this work, will have several graduates with her at the meeting, which is open to the public.

The committee of patrons, made up of prominent leaders in social and church circles, will include Mrs. Harry L. Cootes, Gen. and Mrs. Albert L. Cox, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Finkenstaedt, Mrs. J. Spaulding Flannery, Admiral and Mrs. H. G. Gillmor, Lieut. and Mrs. C. Leslie Glenn, Mr. and Mrs. Harry L. Grant, Henderson Gregory, Mrs. Elvin R. Heiberg, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Houghteling, Coleman Jennings, the Rev. Messrs. Howard Johnson and Andre Liotard, the Rev. and Mrs. John Magee, Gen. and Mrs. Detlow M. Marthinson, Mrs. Macneil of Barra, Mrs. Edward B. Meigs, Mrs. Gilham Morrow, Mme. Octable, Moussot, Mr. and Mrs. Horace Peaslee, Mr. and Mrs. Fred L. Preu, the Hon. and Mrs. Owen J. Mme. Petrova Addresses ORT

Conditions in wartime Russia were depicted by Mme. Anastasia Petrova, secretary to Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff, before a meeting of the Washington Chapter of American Women's O. R. T.

She told how the number of hours of work required of a laborer had been stepped up from 7 a day to 10 and sometimes 11 and how only important workers in factories could get occupational deferment.

She said that as a rule women were not taken into the army but had been ordered to act as workers since early in 1942.

Concerning children she said they had been evacuated to places of safety and had been rationed on black bread and potatoes. Most of them have had no sweets in over a year. She related how university students went out in the spring to bury the dead that had thawed after the long winter.

XAVIER CUGAT'S ORCHESTRA has been definitely selected as the star opening attraction when the new Statler Hotel opens its Embassy Room, Colony Room and Terrace Room (this last is the hotel's cocktail lounge) in the latter part of January. The Statler's equivalent of a "peacock alley," and a gorgeous one it'll be, will be known as the Capital Terrace and the three main rooms, with a capacity that we roughly guess to be well over 600, will open directly off it. There'll also be scads of banquet rooms for private parties. The Embassy and Colony Rooms are connecting and you'll be able to enjoy the Cugat music in both of them on the monumental opening night.

JACK TEAGARDEN and his great Dixieland swing band will sound off for a big dance at Uline's Arena on Sunday night. This is another Goldie Ahearn promotion, should be as successful as his recent sponsorship of Tony Pastor.

INSTRUMENTS ARE SUPERFLUOUS for those weird musicians, Rio and Rita, now at the Lotus. They play "The Old Gray Mare" with bicycle pumps, Rio makes a piece of rubber tubing sound like a violin and when Rita plays a clarinet she isn't satisfied until she evokes a pipe organ rumble. She gets strange effects, too, from a saxophone with a couple of pieces of stove pipe attached in the cause of euphony.

OF PARTIES. A big troop of Boy Scouts was among the many parties in uniform seen in Burt's Trans-Lux during the holidays. . . . Henny Youngman, star raconteur, now at the Capitol Theater, has been tossing late parties at Paul Young's every night since he came to town. . . . Parties of snappy young WAACS, and WAVES decorate Olmsted's Capital cocktail lounge every afternoon. . . . And we've never been in the Dubonnet Room when a group of pretty Navy nurses wasn't in the offing. To our mind they have the niftiest uniforms of any of the service girl groups. . . . A group from the Brazilian Embassy was performing the dances of their native country to Jose Morand's music in the Cosmos Room the other eve. It was beautiful enough for a floor show. . . . Parties of officers from nearby Camp Belvoir disport themselves every night to George Stein's rhythm in River Bend.

New York offers don't magnetize Washington musicians these days. Dave Roberts, the musical wizard of the Neptune Room, recently turned down an offer to take his band into one of Manhattan's biggest hotels. And Ralph Hawkins, the jive king of Crossroads, said "no" to a bid from the Famous Door.

STAFF BULLETINS. Michael Pugliese, tall, dark and diplomatic as well as handsome, is the new head greeter at El Patio . . . George Washington Quinn, the patriarchal (he's in his seventies) and expert mixer of the Lounge Riviera, has retired from the night picture, and has transferred his talents to the Carroll Arms, just a step from his home. He was given a handsome present by the Riviera management . . . Another missing face from Riviera is that of Mixer Dick Ashby, now a steward for the American Legion Club where he's doubtless trading yarns of World War I with brother vets. The beautiful Chinese hostess at Ruby Foo's is named Virginia Dare, but denies Jamestown ancestry.

MOMENTS UNFORGETTABLE. Sasha Lucas' superlative violining of "Oriental Romance" by Rimsky-Korsakoff at the Troika. (When Maestro Lucas' fiddle string snapped in a later number, Greeter Mischa hissed, "Sabotage in the string section!") . . . Larry Hendricks' beautiful modulations on Herbert's "Indian Summer" on his electric organ at the Broadmoor . . . Libby Filman's thrilly singing of "What Is This Thing Called Love" in Cafe Caprice . . . Charlie Baker's silky piano interludes at the Plymouth. He was assistant to Sydney of the Mayflower for 10 years . . . The glee club arrangement of "When Day Is Done" by Alan Holmes and his band in the Metronome Room . . . Dick Himber's unusual version of "Spring Is Here" which brings April right into Del Rio.

Melisa, a gorgeous half-pint of Pan-American charm, is the newest addition to Ovanda's rumba band at Treasure Island. She's cute and bright as a boxful of gold buttons.

VOCAL VISITORS. There should be visiting back and forth between Eve Knight of the King Cole Room and Mary Bozley of the Anchor Room. Eve once sang at Anchor and Mary took over the King Cole warbling when Eve wintered in Florida a season or so ago.

OF DECORS. We hope no one ever trips into that man-sized Chinese vase that stands in a corner of the Burlington Rose Room. What an embarrassment! for this tremendous piece of crockery is worth a coupla thousand dollars . . . Louis has had his Copocabana redecorated in the rumba mood . . . We're still waiting for that monster picture of the Rainbow Room band that is supposed to soon be placed in the lobby of the Hamilton Hotel . . . The new Gay 90's has fresh and gay decorations, but the major items, to us, are those fabulous moustaches and sideburns that are painted on the waiters every night.

A Gallup-ing poll we recently conducted among the maestros as to their opinions on the tune to succeed "White Christmas," discloses only confusion plus confusion. But the boys are sure of one thing—it's time for them to again start playing "It's June in January" and 'Walking in a Winter Wonderland."

WLB Public Group Loses On Wage Raise

A combine of the labor and industry members of the War Labor Board yesterday succeeded in overriding the board's public members to order a wage increase which the latter considered inflationary.

An official board statement pointed out that this was the first time since the board's creation a year ago that the public members have been outvoted in a case by a combination of industry and labor votes.

As a result, the board granted a 5 cents an hour wage increase retroactive to October 8, 1942, to 20 employes of the American Smelting & Refining Co., New York City.

Wayne L. Morse, public member of WLB, in a sharply worded dissenting opinion pointed out that the employes had already received a 29.75 per cent average increase since January 1, 1941, or almost twice the 15 per cent allowed under WLB's "Little Steel" formula.

Differential Narrowed

The board majority which failed to write a formal opinion granted the increase to narrow a differential in wages amounting to 7½ cents an hour with a neighboring plant, and to help the company retain its manpower.

Morse stated that he felt neither argument was justified on the basis of established board policy.

The unusual line-up could have ominous consequences for WLB if it were to become the start of a trend. Observers pointed out that employers as well as workers frequently have compelling reasons to ask WLB to approve wage increases. A permanent combination of this sort could easily wreck national wage controls, observers believe.

The employes were represented by an American Federation of Labor Federal labor union.

Basis of Opposition

Morse stated that "there is a complete absence of a showing of any unusual or unreasonable discrimination of wages in the same jobs in the same locality or industry."

He said the 7½-cent differential cited was "one which has become established and stabilized, and therefore is of the type which it is the board's declared policy not to disturb.'

"There is evidence in this case which indicates that the company contemplated a serious manpower shortage, because some employes had already left the plant and others had threatened to leave if the 5-cent increase is not approved by the board," Morse's opinion stated.

Announced Policy

"On this point it should be noted, however, that the National War Labor Board has announced as a matter of policy that it will not on its own initiative 'approve wage increases for the purpose of influencing or directing the flow of manpower,'" the opinion recalled.

Dean Morse also stated that there is no showing in the case "that the parties have taken any other steps to solve the manpower problem, if any, which exists in this case, other than to seek approval of the wage increase of 5 cents per hour."

The board majority on this case consisted of H. L. Derby and Reuben B. Robertson, employer members, and Robert J. Watt of the A. F. L. and Thomas Kennedy of the United Mine Workers (independent), labor members, while Morse and George W. Taylor, vice chairman of the board, public members, dissented.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborne

Probably the worst disasters at the bridge table occur at no-trump contracts. When a no-trump hand goes wrong it goes over the hill to the poorhouse. Today we have a report on two no-trump tragedies; one was the failure to set a three-no-trump bid which meant game, rubber and tournament; the other was an unhappy and desperate bid of three no trump to get out of trouble that cost the bidder and his partner 1700 points.

The question of correct defense bothers M. K., of New York. He writes: "East won the bid at three no trump after North had, during the auction, bid clubs. South opened the spade ten and dummy, holding jack, five, four in spades, played the jack. North held the ace, queen and small spade and covered the jack with his ace. North then led a club honor, which was gobbled up by declarer's club ace and he thereupon proceeded with the red suits, which netted him nine tricks.

"The South holding was:

"The questions are:

"1. What should North return after the opening lead had been won by him?

"2. Was South's opening lead correct? North contended he could not read South's holding and that he should have led his fourth-best spade."

North is wrong on both counts. The answer to the first question is self-evident; of course, North should return the queen of spades. There is every reason for him to believe that his partner's lead is honest. South, naturally, with no good lead of his own, would open the suit. North bid—clubs; since he did not, his spade lead must be from a good suit.

The ten of spades is the correct lead from South's holding. It is to be preferred to the fourth best, since it has the effect of promoting South's cards by forcing a cover of declarer's honors. The top card of any two cards in sequence is the best choice of leads in this and similar situations.

Smith Gets $500 Bond as Testimonial

Auxiliary Policeman Oliver J. (Ollie) Smith received a $500 war bond last night at a testimonial meeting of regular and auxiliary policemen at Union Hall, 525 New Jersey Avenue Northwest.

But more important to Smith than the bond were the resounding cheers that rocked the hall when he stepped to the rostrum to accept the token of their esteem.

Smith, a Washington Post linotype operator, was stabbed three times October 9 last year when he attempted to quell a disturbance outside a restaurant at First Street and Florida Avenue Northeast. He returned to his auxiliary police duties with No. 1 Precinct after spending seven weeks in Sibley Hospital.

Capt. Robert C. Pierce, of No. 1 Precinct, made the presentation of the bond, saying that Private Smith was acting above and beyond the call of duty in stepping into the altercation unarmed.

In accepting the bond, the proceeds of a collection taken up by policemen, Private Smith said that he already was more than grateful to metropolitan and auxiliary policemen who had visited him in the hospital and made him feel that he really "belonged."

Asthma Sufferers Sleep Fine When Free From Mucus

Choking, gasping, wheezing, recurring attacks of Bronchial Asthma ruin your sleep and rob your blood of vitally important oxygen because you can't get air in and out of your lungs properly. But now it is no longer necessary to suffer from these terrible attacks without the benefit you may receive from a physician's prescription called Mendaco. Within a very short time after the first dose, Mendaco ingredients start circulating thru the blood, thus reaching the smallest as well as the largest Bronchial tubes where they usually quickly help liquefy, loosen and remove thick strangling mucus (phlegm), thereby promoting freer breathing and more restful sleep. In fact, Mendaco has proved so successful in helping thousands of sufferers from recurring spasms of Bronchial Asthma that it is sold under a guarantee of money back unless completely satisfactory. So get Mendaco from your druggist today.

NOW SHE SHOPS "CASH AND CARRY"

Without Painful Backache

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

British, American Economists Plead for Restoration of Trade

Two economists, an Englishman and an American, agreed yesterday, when addressing Washington members of the American Economic Association, that a program of restoration of international trade is an indispensable part of a wider program of postwar economic reconstruction.

Speaking at the second day of the sessions held at the United States Department of Commerce Auditorium, Lynn R. Edminster of the United States Tariff Commission declared that the necessity for such a program is demonstrated by world experience in the field of international economic relations during the years between the first and present World War.

He said the importance of such a program was recognized and subscribed by the governments of the United Nations, in the Atlantic Charter and the International Trade Article of the lend-lease agreements which they have entered into with the United States.

Ways to Reduce Barriers

It will be necessary he said "to find ways and means of reducing trade barriers of all kinds.

Edminster asserted it will be necessary to take coordinate action in the financial and monetary fields, including the stabilization of exchange rates and convertibility of currencies, including also the creation of necessary machinery for establishment and proper functioning of the entire system of international credit and investment.

"It will be necessary," he continued, "to take coordinate action in the field of international political relations designed to create a sense of international security and confidence in the absence of which all measures of economic collaboration will fall short of their goals."

Achievement of the objectives with respect to international law set forth in Lend-Lease is beset with difficulties, he said. Some of these difficulties are in the realm of ideologies and attitudes, which tend to undermine initiative and resolution in dealing with this vital phase of post-war economic reconstruction.

"It is essential," he said, "that every effort be made to anticipate these difficulties and to deal with them in the most constructive way. In order to do this, it is indispensable, so far as concerns the United States, that the executive have effective and flexible powers in dealing with the tariff."

Problem Indivisible

Redvers Opie of the British Embassy spoke of the importance of restoring world trade from Britains standpoint, stating that there are no differences in kind between the interests of Britain and the United States or any other country in this respect.

He said that just as the problem of world peace is indivisible, so the community of interest in expanding world trade is indivisible.

"Britain," he said, "still stands to gain or lose enough from the state of world trade to dispel all doubts of its readiness to play a leading part in concerted action to restore sound trading conditions."

He stated that there could be no doubt that the e is no second best to a flourishing and expanding volume of world trade as a final solution of Britain's problems.

"This happy condition," he said, "would be both cause and effect in relation to prosperity in every country."

Mrs. R. S. Chew Rites Tomorrow

Funeral services for Mrs. Robert S. Chew, 76, of 3631 Ordway Street Northwest, who died yesterday in Norfolk (Va.) General Hospital, will be held in Epiphany Church tomorrow at 2 p. m. Interment will be in Oak Hill Cemetery beside her husband who died in January, 1923.

Mrs. Chew, who had been visiting her son-in-law and daughter, Comdr. and Mrs. William Davis Miller, since Christmas, died as a result of internal injuries received when the station wagon in which she was riding collided with a streetcar last Saturday.

Always an active woman despite her age, Mrs. Chew took over her late husband's position as treasurer of the Washington Home for Incurables and continued in that capacity for many years. She was a member of the board of the home and was deeply interested in its work.

A native of Ipswich, Mass., Mrs. Chew had been a Washington resident for the greater part of her life.

Besides her daughter, Mrs. Chew is survived by three sons, Capt. Robert S. Chew, U. S. Navy, stationed at Newport, R. I., Comdr. John J. Chew, U. S. Navy, stationed here, and Richard S. Chew of Philadelphia, Pa., and seven grandchildren.

Cincinnati, Jan. 5 (INS).—The raging Ohio was receding in the Cincinnati area tonight but downstream the floodwaters spilled over the countryside in many areas, forcing lowland dwellers to flee from their homes and causing extensive crop damage.

In the vicinity of Shawneetown, Ill., hundreds of acres were inundated and a number of farm families were evacuated. Thousands of bushels of corn, standing in the fields unharvested because of the farm labor shortage, were lost. It was predicted the river would crest at from 46 to 47 feet, Sunday.
